Gen. Miaja's Army Blasts Trapped Foes' Suicide Sortie

Machine Guns, Barrage Keep Insurgents' Lines Split.

Italians Routed In Guadalajara

Loyalists Advance Four Miles After Surprise Attack; Rebels Flee.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Madrid (Wednesday), April 14.—Five thousand rebels, trapped in the wreckage of University City, answered the loyalist ultimatum to surrender or be annihilated early today with a suicidal counter offensive.

The surrounded insurgents hurled themselves at loyalist lines near Frenchman's Bridge in darkness during a steady rain.

Rebels on the other side of the Manzanares River, west of the city, opened a drive with ten tanks protected by a heavy artillery barrage in an attempt to join forces with the besieged troops.

Loyalist machine-gunners stopped both assaults with heavy casualties, and Gen. Jose Miaja's guns renewed their merciless bombardment of the University City sector.

Loyalist Victory Reported.

For four days the Fascists have crouched behind shell-pocked walls without food, water or munitions, hoping for relief from their comrades in the Casa de Campo Park across the river—comrades they can see, but who are cut off by loyalist fire.

As Gen. Miajo ordered the artillery barrage, word came of a major loyalist victory on the northeastern Guadalajara front. There a loyalist counter-offensive at daybreak Sunday put thousands of Italian volunteers to flight and turned the tide of Madrid's five-month siege.

Government militia advanced 4 miles along the Madrid-Soria high road and were encamped tonight on the outskirts of Ledanca, reported evacuated by Gen. Franco's rebels.

The drive on Ledanca, following desultory shelling of insurgent entrenchments, caught the enemy by surprise as 8,000 loyalists poured upon the little valley town encircled by the Guadarrama Mountains.

Loyalists Use Planes.

The rebels were reported 63 miles from Madrid on the Guadalajara front. Only three weeks ago they were hammering at the capital's gates.

Government artillery moved up behind the advance and shelled rebel positions around Mount Hita. Loyalist planes bombarded the retreating enemy.

Miaja angrily denounced bombardments of "nonmilitary" objectives."

The day's loyalist victories extended in a wide arc around the city after militiamen, aided by Austrian "dynamiteros" surrounded and captured 100 houses in Carabanchel Bajo.

Loyalists Repelled.

With Insurgents, outside Madrid, April 13 (AP).—Insurgent troops were reported today to have turned back government soldiers trying to break through fortifications in the University City sector.

Gen. Andres Saliquet's veteran insurgent legionnaires were said to have shattered a big government attack during the night in bitter hand-to-hand fighting.

Trench knives, glittering in the light of flares and exploding shells, were used to halt government attacks. Three hundred government dead were found on one battlefield northwest of the capital.

Fascists Taunt Britain.

Rome, April 13 (AP).—A Fascist organ tonight taunted Great Britain with loss of maritime control and urged insurgent Spanish naval forces to sink "enemy ships" indiscriminately.

The publication, Il Regime Fascita, charged Britain's warning to her merchantmen to stay outside Spanish waters constituted evidence "England can no longer defend her ships."

10,000 Strike in Dublin.

Dublin, April 13 (AP).—A general building trades strike in Dublin started today when more than 10,000 men quit work, demanding shorter hours and higher wages.

2 Lynched With Blow Torches; Bill to Curb Mobs Nears Vote

Colored Suspects, on Way to Jail, Seized by Mississippians.

By the Associated Press.

Winona, Miss., April 13.—Two colored men were tortured and lynched by a mob of over 100 white men near Duck Hill, Miss., this afternoon within two hours after they had pleaded innocent in Montgomery County Circuit Court to a charge of murdering a white man.

A third colored man suspected by the mob of complicity in the slaying of George Windham, a country storekeeper, was severely whipped and run out of the county after narrowly escaping the fate of the other two Negroes.

Roosevelt Townes, who had confessed, Sheriff E. E. Wright said, that he shot Windham, was tied to a tree near Windham's store and tortured slowly to death by flames from a blow torch.

A colored man identified only as "Bootjack" McDaniels, indicted with Townes in the Windham slaying, was shot by members of the mob, and his body burned.

Being Led to Jail.

Townes and McDaniels were taken from Sheriff Wright and two deputies early this afternoon as they were being led from the courthouse to be returned to the jail to await trial Thursday.

The prisoners were handcuffed and placed in a waiting school bus. Members of the mob piled into the bus, and others into automobiles. The caravan sped northward toward Duck Hill as the Negroes screamed for mercy. The bus stopped near House Speeds Gavagan Measure in 3 Hours of Debate.

By Russell Smith.

The Gavagan bill making lynching a Federal offense moved steadily toward House passage yesterday in three hours of debate which developed vituperative sectional differences within the Democratic Party.

The onslaught of Southern Democrats against the bill, which attempts to authorize a wide extension of national police power, was directed originally toward its constitutionality.

Their charges that the bill is aimed primarily at the South as a vote-getting gesture by Northern Democrats brought, however, the recommendation by one of the latter to "pass this bill and put the fear of God into the hearts of the politicians of the Southland."

The impetus the Gavagan bill has attained since the House declined to consider the milder Mitchell bill gained added force during the debate when Representative Michener (Republican), of Michigan, read from the floor a newspaper account of the lynching of two colored men in Mississippi.

The bitter House debate yesterday ranged from praise of the Supreme Court for its guardianship of the integrity of the States and denunciation of sit-down strikes to charges that the bill is an attempt by the Democratic Party to pay off its political debt to the colored race and that it would put Tammany

Memorial Site Termed 'Folly' On House Floor

Four Organizations Join Fight as Scott Hits at Commission.

By Gerald G. Gross.

A scathing speech on the floor of the House and the enlistment of four more Washington organizations in the "save the blossoms" campaign were the highlights yesterday of the rebellion against plans to erect the Thomas Jefferson Memorial at the Tidal Basin.

Representative Byron N. Scott (Democrat), of California, charged the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission with acting "in a high-handed, star chamber manner."

His 25-minute denunciatory address, coinciding with the 194th anniversary of Jefferson's birth, marked the first time that the controversy had been laid officially before Congress.

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt was forwarding to the House, via the Budget Bureau, his recommendation that the Appropriations Committee approve a $500,000 item in the second deficiency bill to allow actual construction work on the project to start at once.

Transplanting Dangerous.

Last night the Connecticut Avenue Association went on record in opposition to present plans for the memorial if they result in destruction or relocation of the cherry trees around the Tidal Basin.

It was pointed out that plans to transplant the trees, provided the monument is erected at the Tidal Basin as approved by the commission, probably would be unsuccessful.

Vigorous opposition to the choice of the Potomac Park site also was voiced by directors of the Washington Restaurant Association.

"Local restaurateurs feel," they announced, "that to follow out the present plan would cause an irreparable loss to one of the most beautiful parks in this Capital City, as it would result in the destruction of most of the cherry trees and would deny to hundreds of thousands of citizens the pleasure of witnessing the annual display of cherry blossoms."

Big "Esthetic Loss."

"The destruction of these trees would be a tremendous esthetic as well as economic and commercial loss to the city, as it annually brings to the city hundreds of thousands of people who make this an occasion of visiting the Capital City.

"The Restaurant Association feels that there are other locations which

Nice Will Veto Bill for Relief As Bookie Aid

Will Call Extra Session to Draft Act Free of Gambling Provision.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, April 13.—Gov. Harry W. Nice announced late today he will veto the relief bill and call a special session of the Legislature to reconsider providing relief funds.

Nice based his objections to the bill on grounds it would not raise sufficient funds and that it legalized and taxed bookmaking.

He acted just one week after sine die adjournment of the 90-day regular session.

Date for beginning of the special session was not set. It probably will begin next week, however.

Sasscer Retorts Sharply.

Meantime at Upper Marlboro Lansdale G. Sasscer, president of the Senate, declared the legalization of race-horse bookmaking was adopted at the suggestion of Nice himself. He condemned the Governor's decision to veto the relief bill because of the "bookie" clause. In a prepared statement, Senator Sasscer said:

"I hold no brief for bookmaking and there was no apparent enthusiasm for it at Annapolis. Had there been opposition when the matter was pending, it could easily have been defeated. It was merely adopted as one of the possible sources of revenue suggested by Gov. Nice in his message to the Legislature in an effort on behalf of the General Assembly to avoid the imposition of a sales tax, gross receipts tax or placing too much of a burden on any particular selected group.

"Therefore a composite plan was resorted to. In any composite plan there are bound to be some items not thoroughly acceptable to all members of the Assembly.

Discussed for Weeks.

"The bookmaking item was discussed for some weeks and announced approximately one week before the session closed as included in the plans. Little or no opposition developed at that time.

"Although the plan is not perfect, it is not burdensome upon any particular group and, in my opinion, justifies a trial. If it proves unworkable or should it develop that the public is opposed to the licensing of an existing situation, the next Legislature, or a special session at some later date, could repeal it and substitute something else. I do not feel that the calling of a special session at this time is justified without giving the program a trial.

"I also feel that providing for re-

German Note Warns Pope On Meddling

Paper Charges 'Moral Laxness' in Catholic Monasteries.

Hitler Assails Religious 'Caste;' Orders Church Trials Renewed.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 13.—A declaration the Reich will not tolerate any interference with its internal life was announced tonight in a synopsis of the German note to the Vatican printed in Deutsches Nachrichtenburo, official German news agency.

The note, an official reply to Pope Pius' encyclical accusing Germany of violating the 1933 concordat, was delivered to the Vatican today.

(Meanwhile, a bitter attack on the Catholic Church was opened in the Nazi press, according to the United Press.

(Das Schwarze Korps, Storm Troopers publication, charged moral laxness prevailed in monasteries in Germany and criticized Pope Pius for failing to intervene.

Asks State Supervision.

(The paper demanded state supervision of all monasteries.

("We no longer can trust your morality," it declared. "We fear for the children entrusted to you, for the people under your care, for the part of the national wealth controlled by you . . .

("Where the church organization breaks down, the state must intervene.")

Catholic attorneys, meanwhile, were advised Reichsfuehrer Hitler had ordered resumption of foreign exchange trials of priests, monks and nuns.

The text of the note to the Vatican was not published immediately, but the German agency brought in from Rome the following synopsis:

"Germany expresses surprise at the fact the Pope not only engaged in criticism of internal conditions in the Reich, but went so far as to launch a world-wide appeal which to a certain extent seeks to erect a general anti-German front."

Cites Mexican Encyclical.

"The note points out that the papal encyclical on Mexico did not contain such an appeal to the world's conscience as the present letter does."

(The Pope's message to German Catholics was read in German Catholic churches March 21. It charged the 1933 German-Vatican concordat had been "rendered intrinsically valueless" and placed direct blame on the Nazi government.

(Six days later the Pope addressed an "apostolic letter" to the clergy and laity of Mexico, appealing for "greater intensification of the Christian life.")

"It further pointed out the Vatican applies to the new Germany democratic and parliamentary standards which are not applicable, and that Germany's population is only one-third Catholic.

"Referring to the assertion made in the papal letter that Catholic religion is being destroyed in Germany, the note claims far-reaching concessions made to the Catholic Church by the concordat were always faithfully kept by the government.

"It further declared that National Socialism saved the Reich from bolshevism, thereby saving the church from destruction.

"It points to financial assistance granted to the church, which it claims has gone beyond contractual obligations.

"These facts, it is declared, dispose of the Vatican's complaints.

"The note emphasizes that the necessity to preserve the German national community does not permit the church to set up a state within a state, nor that the clergy should form a caste of its own outside the community.

Assails Interference.

"The community, it is declared, is protected by German laws which allow no room for particularist movements.

"The Reich will not tolerate any interference with its internal life.

"The note declares peaceful development, which, as ever, is desired by the Reich, will depend on the future attitude of the Vatican and on the capacity of the church to adjust itself to present conditions."

Informed diplomatic circles had predicted that the German reply would not cancel the concordat, negotiated almost four years ago to pacify German church-state relations.

Hitler's order for resumption of foreign exchange trials was given to the ministry of justice.

New Labor Laws Studied By Congress

Wagner Ruling Viewed as Signal for Wage, Hour Legislation.

Leaders Urge Caution; Roosevelt Silent on Scope of Power.

By Robert C. Albright.

While President Roosevelt cautiously studied Supreme Court labor rulings, Congress yesterday seethed with proposals for a new course of legislative action believed opened by the court.

Administration leaders at the Capitol were quick to suggest new minimum wage and maximum hour possibilities, but the President withheld comment on the scope of the court decisions.

A note of restraint also was apparent at the Capitol. Some Senators suggested Congress take careful stock of its new responsibilities and labor's obligations as well before further use of its powers.

Cautious Policy Seen.

It was apparent that the President and New Deal leaders will proceed with caution in examining the possibilities raised by the Wagner act decisions, before reaching policy conclusions.

On the outcome of these deliberations will depend not only the course of action laid down for Congress, but probably the fate of the President's court reorganization proposals.

"Undoubtedly new legislation relating to minimum wages and maximum hours will be given consideration," said Senator Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson, adding: "Of course, if the Supreme Court should go back to the doctrine of previous cases, the power of Congress to legislate would be questionable and perhaps void."

NRA Revival Hinted.

NRA revival proposals figured in Capitol talk, and Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, seized on what he regarded as a definite legal signpost to urge enactment of his Federal incorporation bill.

The O'Mahoney plan would permit wages and hours and other regulation to be written into charters and licenses to be granted interstate commerce corporations.

"The question that now remains to be decided is whether this regulation shall be carried on by an ever-growing government bureaucracy or whether we shall establish democratic controls in industry through licenses and charters for corporations."

Study Scope of Ruling.

In some other quarters doubts were raised as to the sweeping application of the court's decision to all manufacturing industries. The decisions were being weighed to determine whether the court's Wagner rulings guaranteed collective bargaining only in the three specific types of businesses cited.

Questions were raised as to collective bargaining regulation in the mining industries, thrown out in the Guffey coal case. Also opened to examination was the Government's right to proceed in child labor legislation.

A stock-taking of Congressional powers in the light of the decisions was in process throughout the Capitol, and in some of the executive departments. Although Senators generally took Robinson's view that "if yesterday's decisions are to become the established doctrines of the Supreme Court, the power of Congress under the commerce clause does extend to relations between employers and their employes engaged in manufacture," others took a sharply restricted view.

See Decisions Narrow.

Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, said he was not convinced that the decisions "are broad enough to bestow upon Congress, without a constitutional amendment, power to fix maximum hours of employment and minimum wages in all industries."

He said he saw nothing in the rulings to indicate a reversal of the NRA invalidation.

"The decisions clearly state that the authority of this board is limited to the facts in each case and that there must appear something more than a productive industrial organization which only indirectly or remotely enters into interstate commerce," said Walsh.

"It seems clear that the larger, national industries, that have a national field of activities, must conform to the National Labor Relations law. It is my opinion that the Federal Government could not fix maximum hours of employment and minimum wages outside of this class of industries."

Need of "careful drafting" of

Anti-Cabinet Vote Likely in Japan's General Election

Tokyo, April 13 (AP).—With most Tokyo papers predicting a majority vote against the government in the general election April 30, Premier Senjuro Hayashi took the stump today to appeal for sacrifice of self-interest.

It was his first public address since the hostile House of Representatives was dissolved March 31. Political observers generally forecast that the election would produce another Parliament equally antagonistic to the Hayashi regime, forcing the premier's cabinet to resign or to dissolve Parliament again.

Hayashi, whose administration had approval of the army, although not its active support, urged voters to forget personal interest for the interest of the nation, declaring Japan was confronted with grave problems at home and abroad.

Low Income Tax Cause of Trouble

Letter From Roosevelt Asks Survey Be Made Before May 1.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Forecasting a Federal deficit for this fiscal year greater than he estimated in January, President Roosevelt yesterday called on the heads of all executive departments, agencies and independent establishments to make an immediate curtailment in all expenditures not absolutely necessary at this time.

For the first time the President in a letter to his department heads admitted that in his January budget message to Congress he had overestimated the revenues of the Federal Government for this fiscal year. The failure of Federal revenues to meet anticipations was forecast in The Washington Post on March 17 when the first returns on income tax collections became known.

Mr. Roosevelt said that as a result of the failure of revenue to meet his estimates "the deficit will be far greater than was anticipated unless there is an immediate curtailment of expenditures." For that reason he instructed all department heads to examine the status of their appropriations and activities "with a view to making a substantial saving by eliminating or deferring all expenditures which are not absolutely necessary at this time" and to report to him not later than May 1.

To Revise Estimates.

Announcing this action at his semi-weekly press conference, the President also said he would send to Congress next week revised estimates of Federal revenue and expenditures, along with his message recommending an appropriation for relief of the unemployed during the fiscal year which begins July 1. He did not reveal the relief figure he would recommend.

In line with the economy theme, 850 employes of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration will be furloughed on May 1, officials announced yesterday. The "furlough" amounts to dismissal, as the AAA is rapidly completing its task, carrying out its contracts made with farmers before the Supreme Court declared the program invalid. Efforts will be made to secure other employment for the workers, it was stated by officials.

Senator James F. Brynes (Democrat), South Carolina, an influential figure on the Senate Appropriations Committee, as well as a White House confidant, is preparing to urge that the States assume a greater part of the relief load. He has undertaken a survey to determine the ability of the various State governments to handle the relief problem. Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, also favors reducing Federal relief expenditures.

The activities in behalf of economy of these Administration figures has been taken on Capitol Hill as a straw in the wind, especially after Senate Democratic Leader Joe Robinson's warning on Monday that either Federal spending must be curbed or new taxes levied. But whether this move to reduce Federal expenditures is successful remains uncertain.

Appropriations Asked.

Senator Harrison, for instance, is ardently advocating the passage of the Harrison-Black educational bill which would grant $1,000,000,000 of Federal money over a five-year period to aid education in the States. There is a loudly vocal bloc in the House which wants relief appropriations increased and drives are in progress for spending substantial funds for housing and farm tenancy.

The fiscal prospects of the Treasury, however, will not be definitely known until next week when the President submits his relief recommendations and his revised estimates. Mr. Roosevelt has carefully guarded the amount he intends to propose for relief, but the opinion on Capitol Hill is that the figure will be between $1,200,000,000 and $1,500,000,000. Such an outlay for relief may prevent the President from achieving a "layman's balanced budget" at the end of the next fiscal year—that is, a budget balanced except for debt retirement payments, as he proposed in his January budget message.

The failure of the March 15 in-

Miss Perkins And Green Call Labor Parleys

Secretary Would Clarify Bargaining; A. F. of L. Plans Member Drive.

By William V. Nessly.

Both Government and labor moved yesterday to take advantage of Monday's Supreme Court decisions validating collective bargaining provisions of the Wagner-Connery labor relations act.

Secretary of Labor Perkins called a conference next Tuesday of leaders in industry and labor, with representatives of the Government and the public to define the "rules, principles and the functions of both parties" in collective bargaining.

At the same time William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, set for Monday a meeting of the Federation's executive council at which an intensive membership campaign will be mapped, in view of the court's rulings. The council also will discuss the possible expulsion of the unions affiliated with John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization.

On Capitol Hill, meanwhile, the House Labor Committee approved, 11 to 4, the Senate-indorsed resolution condemning sit-down strikes, company unions and industrial espionage, though a strenuous floor fight was indicated.

These were outstanding developments in a day marked by widespread discussion of the court decisions and their probable effect on labor's position in the economic organization of the country.

Seeking to stabilize labor-industrial relations in the new legal situation, Miss Perkins asked 14 prominent leaders in industry to confer with 11 officials of labor unions and

Canadian G. M. Strike Throws Orders to U. S.

General Walkout Is Hinted by C. I. O. as Hepburn Mobilizes Police.

By the Associated Press.

Oshawa, Ontario, April 13.—General Motors of Canada decided tonight that emergency orders for shipment abroad must be filled by United States plants because of the Oshawa strike, and an augmented police force was mobilized at near-by Toronto to guard against disorder.

The strike of 3,700 workers in the local plant began last Thursday. Vice President Harry Carmichael indicated tonight the company had "no definite information" when it would end.

Consequently he cabled an English sales representative that immediate delivery orders "will have to be obtained from the United States plants."

General G. M. Strike.

Spokesmen for the United Automobile Workers of America Union and its paternal head, the John L. Lewis Committee for Industrial Organization, have indicated that a strike in all General Motors plants might be called if any effort were made to import cars from the United States to Canada.

It was not at once apparent whether the filling of foreign orders by the United States plants would be regarded in a similar light. "As soon as you send one car across the line to Canada to help break the Oshawa strike, you'll never make another car in the United States," C. I. O. Organizer Hugh Thompson previously had warned the General Motors Corporation.

The police force was augmented at the order of Premier Mitchell Hepburn, who said the Oshawa sit-

Two Stockholders Call Schwab Incompetent, Provoke Near-Riot at Steel Leaders' Session

Wilmington, Del., April 13 (AP).—Big men of steel squared off with clenched fists at the annual stockholders' meeting of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation today in a battle over the fitness of Charles M. Schwab to remain as board chairman of the firm.

Arms were waved menacingly and Eugene G. Grace, Bethlehem president, had to be restrained by friends from lunging at two minority stockholders who demanded that Schwab retire.

"Don't come around and feign friendship," the steel head shouted at the pair—Lewis Gilbert and L. B. Coshland, of New York—as they stepped up to Schwab's chair at the directors' table at the close of the session.

Grace's face was chalk-white. His jaw was set. His eyes flashed. He moved toward Gilbert and Coshland, much smaller men, and they backed away. Other directors gripped his arms.

Faces of Schwab's friends in the meeting room went livid as Gilbert asserted that the veteral chairman had "outlived his usefulness."

One small stockholder, John Souermundt, jumped out of his chair, pulled off his glasses, and screamed:

"My nose has been punched before, but I'm always ready for a fight."

A big man who sat next to Coshland leaned over and said vehemently:

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

Grace, who up to that time had been friendly and conciliatory with Gilbert and Coshland during their repeated attacks on the management, finally said:

"Mr. Schwab has not outlived his usefulness to this corporation. His retirement would be a grave mistake." Schwab was 75 last February.

Grace said he "had no idea" that the board of directors would follow the Gilbert-Coshland recommendation if the stockholders voted it. But the question never got to the directors. It was defeated overwhelmingly, the two dissenters rolling up only 269 votes. There were in excess of 2,500,000 shares voted against the motion.

Gilbert, a rich Park Avenue dweller who has become known as "minority stockholder No. 1 of the United States" because of his campaigns in behalf of small investors, voted his own stock and proxies mailed to him by a half-dozen other stockholders from different parts of the country.

Schwab's face fell, lines of regret replacing a smile, when he heard the motion to oust him. He refused to comment, however, and laughed at proposals that he "punch" someone.

A few minutes before the attack, he had given the stockholders a long talk in which he expressed "my appreciation of the management and the complete co-operation

Stock Dealer Seized Here In $30,000 'Royalties' Fraud

Max Strahl, 34-year-old New Yorker, who is under indictment in his home city for a bond fraud, was seized here yesterday in connection with a $30,000 swindle of a Washington society figure.

Strahl, alias Lewis Decker, who was taken into custody in the home of Mrs. Helen J. G. Rielly, 90, of 1747 Q street northwest, was charged with false representation involving $6,290.

Detective Sergt. Chester Stepp, William M. Malone, supervisor of the Washington field office of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and Postoffice inspectors have been searching for Strahl for three months, they revealed yesterday. New York City authorities, it is understood, also have been attempting to apprehend the suave, good-looking confidence man.

Mrs. Reilly complained to police last February that she had given Strahl $15,000 in cash to purchase Oklahoma oil royalties for her. She said she never received the royalties and that Strahl sold $15,000 worth of negotiable bonds which he took from her to "clinch" the oil deal.

Mrs. Reilly told Detective Stepp that she was first approached by Strahl in June, 1935, at which time he offered for sale the royalties. He asked $15,000, Stepp said.

In November, Mrs. Reilly accuses Strahl of returning to her home and asking for $15,000 more, which he needed to get the royalties, Mrs. Reilly said she gave the man shares of A. T. & T., Mergenthaler and Washington Railway stocks.

Strahl is supposed to have told Mrs. Reilly he would return the stock to her in February with the deed to the oil royalties. This was never done, she said.

When Mrs. Reilly received no word in February she communicated with police. The only information she could give was that the man used the name of "C. Decker."

Stepp with Malone and postoffice

Deficit Larger Than Forecast, President Says

Admits Funds Are Low, Asks for Reductions by Departments.

come tax collections to reach anticipations—as revealed at that time in The Post—and the recent weakness in the Government securtiy market, however, are exerting pressure on Administration officials to bring disbursements into line with receipts, or pursue the disagreeable task of seeking new means of revenue.

Asks For Survey.

Before considering the latter course, the President appears determined to see what can be done by curtailing expenses and thus sent his usual letter to department heads calling for a survey of possible savings much earlier than he did last year.

The text of his letter was as follows:

"It is my desire that the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government will immediately cause a survey to be made of the expenditure requirements of their departments and establishments for the remaining months of the fiscal year 1937. It is apparent at this time that the revenues of the Government for the present fiscal year will be materially less than the amount estimated in my budget message of last January; and, hence, the deficit will be far greater than was anticipated unless there is an immediate curtailment of expenditures."

"You will carefully examine the status of appropriations for your activities with a view to making a substantial saving by eliminating or deferring all expenditures which are not absolutely necessary at this time. You will report to me through the acting director of the budget not later than May 1, 1937, the steps which you are undertaking to reduce expenditures and the amount of the estimated saving resulting therefrom."

The President said he would not know the exact revised figures regarding revenue and expenditures which he proposed to send to Congress until Saturday when he received them from the Treasury. But it was clear the receipts were below expectations and the President said he thought it only fair to let Congress know there had been a sharp drop in gift tax receipts; that income tax collections were down and that there had been no receipts from the railway pension tax.

Income Collections Low.

In his budget message in January the President estimated total receipts for this fiscal year at $5,828,151,000, exclusive of postal revenues. This was an increase of $1,712,194,000 over the actual receipts for last fiscal year. He estimated expenditures, exslusive of postal expenditures, at $8,480,804,000, thus computing the gross deficit for the year at $2,652,654,000, or a net deficit, counting out the statutory debt retirement, of $2,248,129,000.

So far this year the Treasury has collected $3,572,000,000 and has spent $5,780,000,000, leaving a deficit in the neighborhood of $1,896,000,000. Income-tax collections for this fiscal year so far total $1,520,000,000, or approximately 50 per cent more than was collected in the same period last year. But the President in January estimated revenue from income taxes this fiscal year would be 66.3 per cent greater than last year. His estimate for income-tax revenue for the full fiscal year was $2,373,000,000. Thus to attain that figure the Treasury must collect approximately $800,000,000 between now and July 1.

850 to Be Furloughed.

Approximately 850 employes in the office of the Comptroller of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration will be furloughed May 1, AAA officials announced.

Completion of the paying of obligations to farmers, growing out of the production adjustment programs under the agricultural adjustment act was given as the reason for the major lay-off. Employes will receive furlough notices tomorrow, officials said.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the Hoosac Mills case on January 6, 1936, invalidated the production control provisions of the agricultural adjustment act.

Realizing the obligation on the part of the Government to farmers who had carried out contracts and understandings with the AAA in good faith, Congress appropriated $296,185,000 to discharge this obligation. And, on April 1, this year, about 80,000 cases still were unsettled out of the total of several million which remained after the high tribunal's historic decision. As a result, services of the employes who are to be furloughed are no longer needed.

All employes who will be furloughed on May Day will be carried after the expiration of their accrued leave on a nonpay status, it was explained. Efforts have been made to aid those on furlough to get private employment or new jobs with the Government.

About 120 employes will be retained in the office of the cocptroller to complete work of settling claims and other cases which remain to be handled.

Approximatley 3,330 employes of the AAA will remain on active duty after the furloughs now in contemplation become effective.

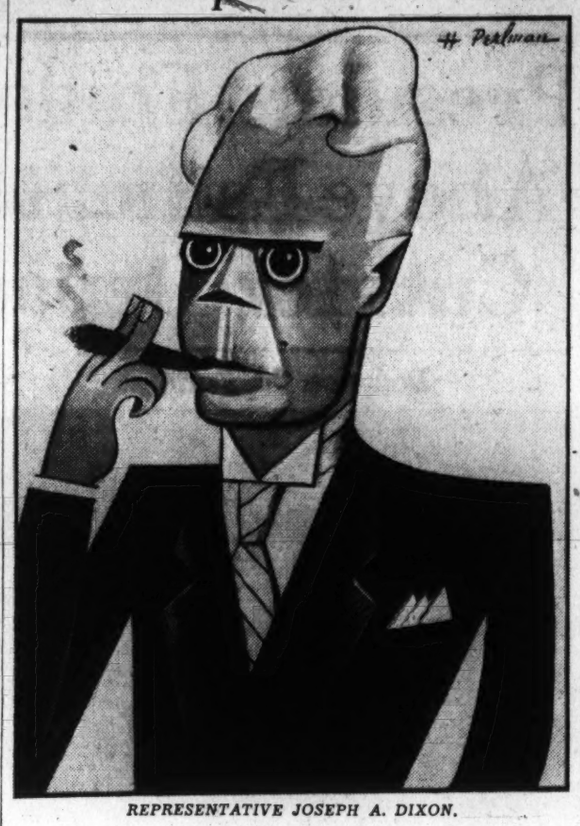
New Faces in Congress.

Promoting Welfare of Youths Is Principal Interest of Dixon



REPRESENTATIVE JOSEPH A. DIXON.

Reticent Representative of Ohio's First District Much Concerned With Curbing Juvenile Delinquencies; His Ideas Widely Copied.

What you find out about the Representative from Ohio's First District will have to be pieced out from what his acquaintances and the Congressional directory say about him. Joseph Andrew Dixon is one of the few Congressmen who won't talk about themselves.

In fact, this middle-sized, middle-aged man with a shock of white hair, a quiet voice, and a sense of humor that bespeaks his Irish heritage, will talk about almost anything else. One of his chief interests, however, is the welfare of boys and young men. For more years than you would care to count he has been much concerned about ways and means of curbing juvenile delinquency.

Friends from Cincinnati remember that more than a generation ago his hope of finding some way to take boys off the streets and out of saloons and gambling halls began to materialize. Playgrounds were set up throughout the city — playgrounds where boys could congregate, organize ball clubs and carry on athletic contests.

Theory Widely Copied.

In the past 20 years these have been copied in many other cities, while the man whose ideas prompted the establishment of the originals has remained in the background, proudly watching boys in increasing numbers seeking out those recreation plots, joining ball leagues and climbing to the top in contests carried on there.

Representative Dixon believes the best way to keep a boy from developing delinquent tendencies is to which he can excel. "A boy has to give hom access to some sport in feel himself superior in one line or another," said Dixon. "If he hasn't a chance to be a good baseball player, a first-class swimmer or a crack golfer, nine chances out of ten he will try to prove his prowess at something else, which may not be so wholesome. Age must help to give youth its chance by providing some suitable outlet for youth's energies and egotism."

First Venture in Politics.

Looking more like a successful business man than a professional politician, Representative Dixon, when pressed, will admit that his present position is the result of his first venture in politics. A life-long Democrat, he was born, reared and still lives in a strong Republican district that has kicked over the traces to elect a Democrat only once before in more than half a century.

Dixon's neat, stylish attire as he circulates through corridors of the Capitol these days is indicative of what the well-dressed man is wearing this spring. This is to be expected. He has been a clothier for many years.

He was quietly minding his business when his friends first petitioned him to enter the Congressional race. Having no political aspirations, he hesitated to run; also doubted he had the slightest chance to win. In the primary election, however, he chalked up a huge majority; in the final, he won by a margin of almost 6,000 votes.

The son of Irish immigrants, Dixon was born in Cincinnati 58 years ago. Has two sons and daughters—all of whom are married—and five grandchildren. His eldest son is his secretary.

Dr. Carl Shaffer Commits Suicide; Served in Army

Dr. Carl W. Shaffer, Alexandria physician, was killed instantly by a bullet fired from a .45-caliber Army automatic pistol at his home, 219 South Pitt street in that city. Dr. William B. Wilkins, acting coroner, rendered a verdict of suicide.

Dr. Shaffer, who served as a surgeon in the Army during the war, had been in poor health for some time, according to his friends, having spent several weeks in Walter Reed Hospital recently. A colored house boy heard the shot, shortly after 1 p. m. and found Dr. Shaffer's body in the kitchen. Mrs. Shaffer was on the third floor, and did not hear the shot. Dr. W. Clyde West was summoned and pronounced Dr. Shaffer dead.

Dr. Shaffer, besides his wife, is survived by a daughter by a former marriage.

Dr. W. R. Weiser Dies; Former Kiwanis Leader

Daytona Beach, Fla., April 13 (AP). Dr. Walter R. Weiser, 67, former treasurer and trustee of Kiwanis International, and for many years a Massachusetts physician, died at his home here today of heart disease.

Weiser was born in York, Pa., in 1870, and studied in the University of Pennsylvania, where he received an M. D. degree in 1892. In 1930 he was elected treasurer of Kiwanis International. He served until 1934.

Bill for Federal Lynching Curb Is Nearing Vote

House Speeds Gavagan Measure in Three Hours of Debate.

Hall in control of New York's Harlem.

Another feature of the debate was reference by Representative Tarver (Democrat), of Georgia, with Chairman Sumners (Democrat), of the same State, the principal assailant of the bill, to what he termed "Jim Crowism" statements of Representative O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, a leading party member, with reference to the District of Columbia.

"There can be no objection to serious consideration not alone of the questions affecting Negroes, but of all questions affecting the American people," said the former Georgia judge. "This is most laudable.

"But when a high and responsible leader of the Democratic Party announces himself as opposing segregation of the races, which statement, in the way he used it, would imply his favor for coeducation of Negroes and whites, and for their coentertainment in hotels and theaters, and when an overwhelmingly Democratic House supports by a sectional vote such a legislative monstrosity, it is time for the people of the South to ask themselves:

"'What protection have we from unconstitutional interference with our handling of the race problems, except such protection as may be offered by the Supreme Court in its construction of the Constitution?'"

Northern Bloc Denounced.

Previously, Tarver had hinted at strong undercover Administration support for the bill when he said he had "no illusions" as to "preventing passage of the bill," because "it has, according to current reports, support from such high and influential sources that the attitude of one member of Congress is a matter of little consequence."

A fellow Georgian, Representative Pace (Democrat), a freshman member, joined Tarver's assault by denouncing Northern Democrats as "seeking to legislate on a subject they do not know anything about" and asserting that "their interest can be attributed only to the presence in their Congressional districts of a limited Negro voting population which is demanding this legislation as the price of their support."

Replying for his Northern colleagues, Representative Sweeney (Democrat), of Ohio, characterized the Southerners' arguments as "camouflage," and added:

"The fact remains that more than 5,000 men have been put to death by mobs in the last 82 years. Let the Southern Senators filibuster if they will; this is the legislative branch of the people. So let us pass this bill. Let us put the fear of God into the hearts of the politicians of the Southland."

Fish Leads Defense.

Representative Fish, of New York, carried the burden of defense for the bill most of the afternoon. He drew the fire of but one member from above the Mason and Dixon line, Representative Hook (Democrat), of Michigan, who asked, "If we can't legislate, as the Administration claims, how in the world are we to legislate on the crime of lynching?"

"If the gentleman wants to put human lives on the same level with property rights, he may do so, but I won't," Fish replied.

His answer was greeted with a burst of applause from a crowded gallery, including a considerable number of colored persons, bringing the admonition from O'Connor, who was presiding, that the galleries would be cleared unless decorum prevailed.

Fish also clashed with the only Mississippi member to engage in the debate, Representative Colmer. Yesterday's lynching did not occur in Colmer's district. The Mississippi member asked Fish if the bill would apply to "gang murders for which your State is known," and when Fish answered in the negative, Colmer inquired if he would support an amendment to the bill covering such "gang murders." Fish answered that he woud have to see the amendment first.

When he read the account of the lynching, Michener interrupted a defense of the legislation by Representative Celler (Democrat), of New York, to shout that "this horrible incident proves that lynching has not ceased," to which Southerners later pointed out that this is only the second lynching incident of the year. The previous one occurred February 3 at Headland, Ala.

"This lynching is not an indication that the laws of Mississippi condone or approve such acts," Representative Miller (Democrat), of Arkansas, said. "Those participating in this lynching have violated the law of Mississippi and the good citizens of the State will resent it. But it is not a case for Federal interference."

Suits Ask $450,000 In Car-Auto Crash

Seven suits, seeking an aggregate of $450,000 were filed against the Capital Transit Co., yesterday in District Court by members of the family of Mrs. Elizabeth Beach, 3062 M street northwest.

The suits alleged six children and their mother were riding in a cab operated by the father, Edgar R. Beach, when it was struck by a street car at Thirty-fourth and O streets northwest, September 1, 1935.

Those who brought suit were Mrs. Beach, $50,000; Virginia, $50,000; Robert, $100,000; Meredith, $50,000; Nathaniel, $50,000; Gibson, $50,000, and William, $50,000. Through Attorney William R. Lichtenberg, the plaintiffs claimed they were seriously hurt through the negligent operation of the street car.

the small country store where Windham was fatally shot through a window one night last December. Then the men were tied to a tree and tortured.

"This terrible thing will be immediately investigated by the grand jury," said Circuit Judge John F. Allen, of Kosciusko, who was presiding at the regular criminal term of circuit court here when the men were arraigned.

Judge Allen said he would hold a conference with the district attorney, and that plans for investigating the double lynchings would be made immediately.

Deputy Sheriff A. J. Curtis said the prisoners were being led from the courthouse to the jail and men milling about the courtyard closed in.

"Two men pinned me from behind and they grabbed the other officers in the same way," Curtis said.

"It was all done very quickly, quietly and orderly."

Curtis was asked if the men were masked.

"No, they weren't masked."

"Did you recognize any of them?"

"No, they were behind me, and I couldn't tell who they were."

The mob action came while representatives in Congress discussed Federal anti-lynching legislation, long a subject of controversy.

Republicans and most Northern Democrats were lined up behind a bill by Representative Gavagan (Democrat), New York, to impose fines and prison terms upon peace officers who permitted a prisoner to be lynched, as well as mob members.

Meanwhile, at Jackson, Gov. Hugh White boasted that "we are justly proud of the fact that Mississippi has not had a lynching in 15 months."

A minute later he was called from the conference to learn by his secretary that the two colored men had just been lynched.

10 Students Suspended After Class Egg Fight

Rensselaer, N. Y., April 13 (AP).—Ten students were suspended for a week from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute at Troy today as the result of an egg fight that preceded the annual freshman banquet.

Dr. James W. Hotchkiss, R. P. I. president, announced the suspensions and said that an investigation was being continued into the egg battle, during which shots were fired into the air last night by Troy police. Beyond saying that the suspended students included seven sophomores and three freshmen, Dr. Hotchkiss declined to disclose their identity.

Aimee, Crying, Throws a Kiss In Slander Suit

Says Daughter Threatened Fifty Legal Actions to Get Contracts.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, April 13.—Aimee Semple McPherson drank six glasses of ice water, shed copious tears three times, threw one kiss at a spectator and complained that a lawyer was making faces at her as she testified today for the defense in her daughter's $150,000 slander suit.

Between these dramatic interludes she regaled a courtroom jammed with women in house dresses and men wearing galluses, with a story that her daughter, Roberta, once threatened her with 50 lawsuits to be filed "one every day for 50 days" if she did not sign some contracts Roberta wanted.

Roberta's suit is directed against Aimee's lawyer, Willedd Andrews, based on allegations that Andrews accused Roberta of trying to "blackmail" her mother. The evangelist's testimony, however, dealt chiefly with her own feelings toward Roberta.

Is Called "Bambi."

It was in Phoenix, Ariz., while convalescing from pneumonia, Mrs. McPherson said, on March 13, 1936, that all the suits were threatened.

She said Roberta appeared to be very nervous and in reply to her questions her daughter said, "You'll find out soon enough, Bambi."

"That's her love name for me, or it was," Aimee explained.

She said they went to a hotel and Roberta produced four legal documents and said to her:

"Mother, things are about ready to blow off. I have four contracts here and you've got to sign them. You've got to sign them immediately or be plunged into a lot of lawsuits."

Aimee said her daughter told her one was a one-million-dollar suit "already prepared" by Rheba Crawford, her co-pastor at Angelus Temple. The 50 others, Mrs. McPherson said she was told, would be filed by creditors, one each day.

Says Roberta Spoiled.

"I told her I couldn't understand the meaning of all this. I asked her what was in the documents."

Roberta produced them, she said, and she discovered that each stipulated a four-year contract for Miss Crawford, Harriet Jordan, dean of the Bible school; Jacob Moidel, attorney for the Temple, and Miss Semple's reported fiance, and one for Miss Semple herself.

"I wept over this," she said, "I told her that I had spoiled her. She never had to wash a dish or even hang up her clothes. She never wanted for anything, and now that she wanted a contract from her own mother was almost too much."

But after a session of "coercion" lasting from 6 a. m. one day until 5 a. m. the next, Mrs. McPherson said she signed the contracts.

5 Minutes Short Of Flight Record, Hawks Cracks Up

Newark Airport, Newark, N. J., April 13 (U.P.).—Frank Hawks, veteran speed flier, cracked up his low wing monoplane, Time Flies, when he landed here tonight after a 4 hours 25 minutes flight from Miami, Fla. He was not injured.

Hawks cracked up at the end of an unsuccessful attempt to set a Miami-Newark record. He landed at 6:56 p. m., only 5 minutes behind the record held by Howard Hughes, young Hollywood millionaire sportsman.

In landing, Hawks' $100,000 ship struck a bump, and bounded 10 feet into the air. The front spar of the right wing, where the right wheel gear joins the ship, tore into the wing.

Hawks said he flew at an altitude of 15,000 feet until he reached Norfolk, Va., where a tail-wind forced him to reduce his altitude.

On the flight South Hawks said he used 31 gallons of gasoline. He didn't know how much he used coming back.

Three Organizations Join Fight as Scott Hits at Commission.

could be secured which would be more suitable and where the memorial could be erected at much less expense."

Unwillingness to submit to alteration of the Tidal Basin and elimination of its famous floral display also provided the basis of the protest of the advisory council of the District Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Virginia White Speel was named chairman of a special committee which will present a resolution to the executive board April 26.

Representative John J. Boylan (Democrat), of New York, chairman of the Congressional commission, sat smiling in his chair as Scott approved site and design for the bitterly attacked, the commission-marble monument.

Previously Boylan had delivered his annual eulogy of Jefferson, refraining from mention of the memorial fight, which has received national prominence since his commission announced two months ago it would be built at the Tidal Basin and John Russell Pope would be designer.

While Scott was delivering his impassioned argument against adoption of "Boylan's folly," President Roosevelt was recommending that the House Appropriations Committee approve a $500,000 item in the second deficiency bill to allow actual construction work on the memorial to be started speedily.

Approval of the item was forwarded to Congress by the Budget Bureau. As reported exclusively yesterday in The Post, Boylan declared $500,000 would suffice for the time being, though previously he had asserted $1,500,000 would be requested. Congress last summer authorized the expenditure of $3,000,000 on the project.

Scott pleaded against destruction of the cherry blossom display, which the present memorial plans would effect, warning that such action might be resented by the Japanese.

"The Japanese are a sensitive people," he said. "If their good-will gesture, symbolized by the circle of beautiful trees around the Tidal Basin, is to be brushed aside for a purely National memorial, one can hardly blame them if they feel slighted and aggrieved."

He charged the Boylan's commission with acting arbitrarily in its selection of an architect and with keeping its proceedings secret even from members of the House.

"The commission," he said, "would go into an already completely and beautifully developed area, Potomac Park, and scramble up a layout that is a joy and treat every time you drive through there, block off a vista of the stately Lincoln Memorial and in fact set up a competing interest to that distinguished monument."

Scott called upon the Appropriations Committee, of which Boylan is a member, to withhold funds "until the commission at least considers other viewpoints on this important quesion.

If that fails, he said, the House should eliminate the appropriation when the deficiency bill reaches the floor.

"Let the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission consider holding a national architects competition to secure an original design for this great and deserved tribute to a great American. And let this commission at least hear arguments for translating this design into a 'living memorial,'" he concluded.

Jefferson Eulogized.

Before 200 members of the Society of Virginia assembled to mark the 194th anniversary of his birth, Thomas Jefferson was eulogized last night as the founder of world democracy.

Senator Elbert D. Thomas, of Utah; Assistant Secretary of State R. Walton Moore, Representative John J. Boylan, of New York, and Mrs. Lucile Foster McMillan, of the Civil Service Commission, paid tribute to the statesman. The banquet was held at the Willard Hotel.

Moore, president of the society and toastmaster, saluted Jefferson as the ablest man the American Commonwealth ever produced.

Mrs. McMillan pointed to Jefferson's achievements as a philosopher, humanitarian, champion of education for the masses, architect, agriculturist, inventor and defender of freedom of thought, speech and religious worship.

and understanding between management and stockholders."

Grace also had paved the way for harmony by announcing that Bethlehem's current earnings "justify that serious consideration be given to declaring a dividend on the common stock" at the board meeting later this month.

The corporation paid $1.50 last December, the first disbursement on common stock since February, 1932.

Gilbert and Coshland voted against the management's slate of directors on the grounds of "lack of confidence," and demanded Grace and other officers of the corporation repay immediately the $15,000,000 balance of $18,000 000 they borrowed from the corporation in 1931 and used to buy stock in the corporation.

N. Y. Jury Meets In Assault-Slaying

Riverhead, N. Y., April 13 (AP).—The Suffolk County grand jury began to hear evidence in the case against Howard Magnussen, 26, pudgy-faced Long Island candy maker, accused of the assault slaying of 4-year-old Joan Morvan February 28. The grand jury adjourned until next week after ten witnesses testified.

The victim's father, George Morvan, now held on $100.000 bail on a charge of felonious assault, waived immunity before entering the grand jury room, where he testified for an hour. Morvan's common-law wife, Mrs. Norma Gatty, a sister of Magnussen, also is held on $100,000 bail.

Walter Magnussen, 9-year-old brother of Howard, was expected to be the State's chief witness with a reported statement that he heard Joan's cries during the alleged criminal assault.

Garcia Is Found Guilty in Three D. C. Robberies

Tuxedo Burglar Offers No Defense; Faces Term of 50 Years.

Dapper George Garcia, 25-year-old Cuban, who plied his burglary trade here with such industry that he was indicted 27 times for housebreaking and larceny, yesterday in District Court was found guilty of breaking into homes of three Washingtonians and stealing jewelry from each.

The fashion-plate Garcia faces a total of more than 50 years on the three charges, and Assistant United States Attorney Samuel F. Beach said that several more of the remaining 24 indictments would probably be tried.

Garcia was convicted of having broken into the Wardman Park Hotel apartment of August Giegengack, public printer, where jewelry worth $31 was taken; of having broken into the home of Temple W. Hilliard, 2807 California street northwest, where jewelry worth more than $300 was taken, and with having entered the home of Alfred Lindstrom, 1109 Belmont road northwest, where a small quantity of jewelry was removed.

Garcia, who committed his burglaries, police said, while clad in a tuxedo or in more formal evening clothing, was arrested several months ago. He was labeled the "celluloid" burglar because of his penchant for inserting a strip of that between the door and the jamb and easing back snap locks.

It was his failure to dispose of minor articles, some of them mere trinkets, that led to Garcia's downfall. The articles found in his N street home were traced to their original owners and police said he toured the city with them, pointing out places he had entered. The articles were identified by their owners and as a result Garcia is said to have admitted many of the housebreakings with which he was charged.

Garcia, tried before Justice F. D. Letts, did not take the stand, nor was any defense offered. The jury was out just 12 minutes before returning to court with a verdict that may mean the young Cuban will spend a score of years in prison.

According to the police version of his activities Garcia was accustomed to prowl the better sections of the city clad immaculately. When he found a residence or apartment that seemed to offer ample loot, he would insert the small celluloid strip into the door and enter. Most of his more valuable loot, it was said, was sold in New York.

Disposition of the remaining 24 cases against him await his sentencing by Justice Letts on the three convictions.

22 Hurt, 1 Missing As Bus Hits Creek

Brunswick, Ga., April 13 (AP).—Twenty-two persons were injured by the plunge of a Miami-New York motor bus into White Oak Creek, 20 miles south of Brunswick, during a fog early today.

Rescued by White Oak boatmen, passengers said a woman they believed to be a Mrs. Stewart, of Charlotte, N. C., was missing. She boarded the vehicle at Jacksonville, Fla.

The bus left the highway at 3:30 a. m., near a small bridge and turned upon its side in 5 feet of water.

Coroner Rules Death Of Student, 18, Suicide

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald yesterday issued a certificate in the death of Byrne T. Burns, 18-year-old pre-medical student at George Washington University, who was found Sunday morning in a bathroom of his home at 3100 Ellicott street northwest, a bullet wound in his forehead.

The youth's unclad body was discovered by his father, Dr. William Burns, prominent diagnostician. Police at first were uncertain whether Burns was a suicide or had shot himself accidentally.

inspectors began the almost impossible task of tracing only a name. In New York they received information that a man answering the description of the man sought here also was wanted there for similar frauds.

Yesterday, Strahl returned to the Reilly home with an agreement which he wanted Mrs. Reilly to sign. Police said it was a "settlement" for $10,000 "if Mrs. Reilly would forget all previous transactions."

While Strahl was in the home, police, who had been notified, arrived and took him into custody.

Mrs. Reilly, widow of J. W. Reilly, former United States Army general, is ill at her home and would not see reporters. She is said to live alone with her maid.

Strahl was released under $5,000 bail for a hearing in Police Court this morning.

Department of Justice records show he has been arrested ten times since 1933 in other stock transactions. All of the charges were dismissed except in one instance, when Strahl was fined $100 for selling stock without a license.

Trained Fleas Admitted To U.S. as Wild Animals

Boston, April 13 (AP).—A shipment of trained fleas entered the Port of Boston today as "wild animals."

The Federal bureau of entomology in Washington provided the classification. This ruling climaxed a controversy over whether the 100 fleas would be considered insects or foreign entertainers.

The "wild animals," packed in several flat, ventilated tins, suffered no ill effects from their voyage from England. Their owner, Mme. Helena Crisp, of Huddersfield, Yorkshire, England, said the training period was seven days.

Employes Free To Join Union, Ford Concedes

Magnate Scouts Charge of Arming Plants, Denies He Expects Trouble.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, April 13.—Henry Ford said today his employes were "free to join anything they want to."

"They have always been free to join any church, any lodge or any union they want to," he said in his first interview after the Supreme Court decision upholding the Wagner labor relations act."

He said the safeguards given labor by the Wagner act had been Ford Motor Company policy for years.

To a question of whether he would confer with a union committee on demands or grievances, he replied: "Ask me that when the time comes."

"Is there any possibility that some day you may sit across a table from John L. Lewis as Walter P. Chrysler and William S. Knudsen did?" an interviewer asked. There was a quizzical smile, but no reply.

Trouble Not Expected.

Asked what the Ford Company would do in the event of a strike at the River Rouge plant, Ford said: "We don't anticipate trouble of any kind, and we are not prepared to say what we would do"

He laughed and continued: "I heard the other day that we had bought some machine guns. I looked around and found that the talk was started over a couple of old guns we had bought as museum pieces. They don't even have firing pins."

He declined to discuss the effect of the Supreme Court decision on industry in general. He said, however, that the labor relations act fitted in so well with "the desperate attempt of the Wall Street crowd to control everything" that it "might have been inspired by Wall Street."

"Wall Street wants to stabilize things at some level," he explained. "They want to create a machine that will turn out as much dividends as possible. They have industry well controlled on the management side and if they can control labor, through the unions, they think they will have it stabilized. The unions were created by Wall Street—by capital—to bring about that control.

Favors Competition.

"The Ford Company is the disturbing element in this picture of stabilization. It believes in competition. It believes in scrapping old machinery when new machinery will produce automobiles at lower cost. It believes that markets can be created only by paying high wages.

"We are going to give the Wall Street crowd some real competition —and you can't compete on low wages."

He declined to expand on the reference to wages, and disclaimed all responsibility for reports published in New York that he was contemplating a $10 daily minimum wage.

"Down in Washington," an interviewer remarked, "J. Warren Madden, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, said after the Wagner decision that 'The Ford Company is subject to the law.'

Ford shrugged his shoulders.

"Isn't everything?" he asked.

Administration Chiefs Renew Campaign for Court Program

President Still Silent as Farley, Robinson Plead for His Plan; Leaders Shun Compromise Despite Wagner Rulings.

By Sidney Olson.

Seemingly unaffected by the Supreme Court's change of attitude, Postmaster General James A. Farley and Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, yesterday renewed their demands for passage of the President's court program.

But while Administration leaders indicated an outward unwillingness to compromise, or even to relax the drive for six additional Supreme Court justices, the President withheld direct comment on his court reorganization proposal and refrained from demanding its enactment.

Farley, in a revision of his Philadelphia speech for the Jefferson Day dinner last night, said:

"I note that some of the opponents of the measure are saying that the recent decisions of the Supreme Court have rendered it unnecessary.

"That is an absurd idea. The circumstance that by a single vote the court sustained the validity of several New Deal measures furnishes no security of permanent liberalism on the high bench.

"The necessity for the judicial reform measure is as great and compelling today as it was day before yesterday, and I am quite sure that Congress, when it comes to voting, will be found to feel the same way."

Senator Robinson, in a carefully prepared statement for the press, summed up his conclusions on the swing of Justice Owen J. Roberts to the so-called liberal quartet of the Supreme Court, in a sentence:

Bill Called "Bludgeon."

"From these considerations it appears that the necessity for legislation or for constitutional amendment, or both, concerning the reorganization of the judiciary, cannot be suspended by the variableness of an opinion of a single justice."

Rumors on Capitol Hill yesterday centered about the often-mentioned possibility that two of the justices would retire from the bench if the President would withdraw his court program, and about the possibility that the Administration would continue to hold the court revision up as a "bludgeon over the Supreme Court, as one Senator put it privately.

Chairman Henry F. Ashurst of the Senate Judiciary Committee said Monday: "My solicitude is to keep the bill pending." In some quarters this was taken as an indication that the Administration was not overanxious to force the bill out to the Senate floor.

This attitude, however, contrasted with repeated statements of other Administration leaders that the prolonged hearings before the committee constitute a "repetitious filibuster against this bill" (Secretary of the Interior Ickes, at Chicago) and of Farley last night: "The filibuster is on now. The committee has been holding hearings for a solid month. * * * Yet at the first suggestion that a day be set to close the taking of testimony the opposition clamored that an effort was being made to muzzle them, and their spokesmen declared that there were 50 witnesses they wished to produce.

"Doubtless they can find them as long as there are publicists eager for the limelight and authors seeking advertisement for their books."

Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, a leader of the opposition to the court program, stated last night:

"We agree there will be no compromise. Already two members of the Judiciary Committee have swung into the opposition as a result of the court's decision.

"One was definitely for the bill, the other was non-committal. We are making rapid progress."

Oppositionists Talk.

At the committee hearings yesterday Dr. G. M. Bruce, Luther Theological Seminary, St. Paul, Minnesota; John Clark Knox, United States district judge, New York City, and Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Washington, appeared in opposition to the President's court bill.

Knox said: "So far as the Southern District of New York is concerned, I desire that it should never for any purpose whatsoever be beleaguered by a flying squadron of judges who, perhaps, under some conditions, might properly be classified as privateers."

Bishop Hughes, saying he was the "unofficial representative of a vast body of our citizens who are troubled and even appalled" by the plan, said the bill is "a colossal mistake * * *"

Dr. Bruce said he had "viewed with considerable alarm" some of the Administration policies, particularly the court bill, and argued for a constiutional amendment as preferable to the addition of six justices to the supreme Court.

In Lima, Ohio, Senator William H. Dieterich (Democrat), Illinois, supporter of the President's bill, acclaimed the President as "the greatest exponent of the principles of constitutional government as promulgated by Thomas Jefferson since Jefferson's time."

Leonard E. Tilden Funeral Is Today

Burial services will be held in Marlboro, N. H., today for Leonard E. Tilden, 76, retired Labor Department employe, who died Saturday at his home, 1313 Fairmount street northwest. Rites were held yesterday at Hines' undertaking establishment.

Mr. Tilden, an authority on the textile industry, retired from the Labor Department in 1931, after 42 years of service.

Born in New Hampshire, Mr. Tilden was educated in that State and then became a reporter for the Boston Transcript, for which he worked until he came to Washington in the 1880s. He was employed then as private secretary to Senator Henry William Blair, of New Hampshire. In 1889 he was appointed a special agent of the Labor Department.

Mr. Tilden for several years published a weekly newspaper. Later he became president of the National Association of Amateur Newspaper Publishers.

His wife, Mrs. Harriet M. Tilden, survives.

'Coffee and Sinkers' Reducing Diet Praised

New Orleans, April 13 (AP).—Two sturdy utilitarians of lower bracket diets—"coffee and sinkers"—were viewed today at the Southern Beauticians Association convention as proper fare for those in quest of the slender figure.

Dr. Howard J. Crum, plastic surgeon and beauty consultant, of New York City, said he had found them "most satisfactory" after years of experimenting with reducing diets.

Canadian G. M. Strike Throws Orders to U. S.

General Walkout Is Hinted by C. I. O. as Hepburn Mobilizes Police.

uation aparently was becoming "a little more tense" because "Communists from outside were ready and willing to take an increasingly active part."

Fighting Lewis, Communism.

Hepburn consistently has supported General Motors in its refusal to recognize the C. I. O. as negotiator for employes in the adjustment of wages and working conditions.

His fight is against "the forces of John L. Lewis and communism which are now marching hand in hand," the premier said.

The premier thus far has mobilized 100 mounted policemen and an emergency contingent of constables. He asked Dominion (similar to the United States Federal) government assistance tonight, but did not disclose the number of additional reserves being assembled at Toronto, 35 miles from Oshawa.

Union Organizer Thompson scorned any suggestion that trouble might develop. He charged that "Toronto thugs" had been trying to stir unrest, but without success.

"Honestly, have you ever seen a strike as well disciplined?" he asked.

Pickets continued to walk before the Oshawa plant today, but they were quiet.

Michigan Pickets Riot.

Grand Haven, Mich., April 13 (AP). Strike sympathizers used fists, clubs and bricks today in an attempt to prevent workers from entering the plant of the Kiddie Kover Manufacturing Co. here, where a strike started a week ago.

The company closed the factory and 22 employes departed under police guard. A temporary injunction issued by Circuit Judge Fred T. Miles prohibits all but "peaceful" picketing.

Hershey Strike Over.

Hershey, Pa., April 13 (AP).—The Hershey chocolate strike is ended.

Hundreds of men and women workers returned today to the ivy-clad stone factory. For the first time in 12 days they were not jeered by pickets. The Hershey Chocolate Corporation said by Monday a normal force would be on hand.

An agreement was reached last night by which the nearly 3,000 employes would vote whether they want the Loyal Workers Club, or the United Chocolate Workers, affiliate of the Committee for Industrial Organization, to act as their bargaining agency.

Chicago Steel Strike Called.

Chicago, April 13 (AP).—The C. I. O. Steel workers' organizing committee called a strike of 500 employes at the Calumet Steel Co. today when union leaders charged the company had refused to sign a new working contract.

The strike started when the day shift left the plant in suburban Chicago Heights and the night shift refused to enter until the concern had acceded to the union's demands.

Nicholas Fontecchio, field representative for the union, said there was no dispute over wages or hours, but the union demanded company officials sign an agreement reached after three weeks' negotiations.

Richard F. Boyle Funeral Rites Held

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Carrie Hamilton Boyle; a son, Richard F. Boyle, jr., and a daughter, Virginia Boyle, all of Philadelphia, and four sisters, Mrs. James G. Rice, Mrs. Kirk Kibbler, Mrs. Malcolm Sparrough and Mrs. Paul Frederick, all of Washington.

Larz Anderson To Be Buried Privately Here

Wife at Side as Diplomat Dies in White Sulphur Springs Hotel.

The body of Larz Anderson, wealthy diplomat and globe trotter, is to be brought here for private burial, it was announced in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., following his death there yesterday.

Mr. Anderson died in the Greenbrier Hotel, where he had been ill for five weeks of a heart and kidney ailment. He was 71. His wife, who was one of the world's wealthiest girls when he married her in 1897, was at his side when the end came.

The Larz Anderson home here at 2118 Massachusetts avenue is one of the show places of Washington, and in 1931 served as the abode of the King of Siam and his entourage while that monarch was being treated for an eye ailment by Dr. William Holland Wilmer. The royal visitor was delighted to find a bronze Buddha in the reception hall. Fifty servants were provided by the Andersons.

Was Ambassador to Japan.

Mr. Anderson's last diplomatic assignment was that of Ambassador to Japan, a post to which he was appointed by President William Howard Taft and which he relinquished when Woodrow Wilson moved into the White House in 1913.

He was born in Paris August 15, 1866, the son of Gen. Nicholas Longworth Anderson and Elizabeth Kilgour Anderson. His education was begun in Paris and continued at Phillips Exeter Academy in New Hampshire and at Harvard University.

He broke off his studies in the Harvard Law School after one year when President Harrison named him second secretary of the American Legation at London. That was in 1891.

In 1893, President Cleveland appointed him first secretary of the American Embassy in Rome, and later he became charge d'affaires there. It was while he was in Rome that he met Isabel Weld Perkins, of Boston, daughter of Commodore George Perkins, U. S. N., whose inheritance of $17,000,000 made her one of the wealthiest young women in the world.

$100,000 Marriage.

Their marriage on June 10, 1897, was a social event of international magnitude, and was reported to have cost $100,000.

The year after his marriage, Anderson volunteered for the War with Spain, serving as captain, assistant adjutant general and acting adjutant general of the Second Division Army Corps.

He resumed his diplomatic career in 1911, when President Taft appointed him as envoy to Belgium. In the following year Taft named him Ambassador to Japan.

The Brookline mansion, which was opened for periodical inspection by a public interested in its art treasures, was given over in the summer to a training camp for the R. O. T. C. of Harvard.

Mr. Anderson disliked ostentation. However, in 1908, he and Mrs. Anderson attracted widespread attention when they purchased a foreign-made automobile that traveled at the then incredible speed of 50 and 60 miles an hour. It contained electric lights, a heater, fans, toilet equipment, a writing desk, larder and a library.

Among Mr. Anderson's gifts were $25,000 to Phillips Exeter Academy and $200,000 to Harvard, where he got his bachelor of arts degree in 1888. The money to Harvard was for the Anderson Bridge, near the stadium, named for his father.

Mr. Anderson was a member of the Society of Cincinnati, the Loyal Legion and clubs in Washington, New York, Boston, London and Paris. Japan decorated him with the Order of the Rising Sun, Italy with the Grand Cross of the Crown and of SS. Maurice and Lazarus, and Belgium with the Grand Cordon of the Order of the Crown.

Tropic Disease Authority Dies In New York

Capt. A. M. Fauntleroy, 61, Former Naval Officer, in D. C. During War.

Capt. Archibald Magill Fauntleroy, 61, U. S. N., retired, one of the world's foremost authorities on tropical diseases, died late yesterday at Presbyterian Hospital in New New York.

For the last several years Capt. Fauntleroy, who retired from the Navy in 1921, had been in ill health.

A member of an old Virginia family, Capt. Fauntleroy was the son of Gen. Archibald Magill Fauntleroy, a surgeon in the Confederate army. His father was personal physician to Gen. Joseph E. Johnston.

Capt. Fauntleroy was graduated at the head of his class at the University of Virginia, and entered the Navy as a surgeon aboard the U. S. S. Scorpion in 1901.

Worked in Samoa.

He knew the South Sea Islands before the World War. It was Capt. Fauntleroy who went to Samoa and its adjoining islands in the early 1900's and established a reputation for the medicine of the Western World.

He was particularly skilled in treating elephantiasis. In German Samoa he made such a reputation for himself that he was commended by the government of Kaiser Wilhelm. The natives petitioned him to stay on in his battle against the strange forms of death which threatened them.

At one time before the World War a group of German surgeons who had witnessed an operation performed by Capt. Fauntleroy described it as the most skilful they had ever seen.

Was Stationed Here.

When the German armies marched into France and Belgium in 1914, Capt. Fauntleroy was a medical observer. He later wrote a book on the medical methods of the Germans. This was widely published and studied by medical men everywhere.

When the United States entered the World War, Capt. Fauntleroy was stationed at the Naval Hospital here, where his work won high praise.

In the early days of his career, Capt. Fauntleroy invented the Fauntleroy sling, a swing method of transporting wounded and ill men from one vessel to another.

World War Spy Pleads Against Return to Reich

Says His 'Doom Is Sealed' When American Ship Docks in Hamburg.

By the United Press.

New York, April 13.—The nerve and bluff of Dr. Armgaard Karl Graves, a noted World War spy, was gone tonight as he pleaded with immigration authorities to cancel his sailing orders to Germany.

"They'll shoot me just as soon as the boat docks at Hamburg," he cried.

The man with a dozen names stood in detention quarters on Ellis Island, tears trailing down his face—a broken old man.

Immigartion authorities had nothing to say.

At noon tomorrow the steamer President Roosevelt will sail for Germany with Graves in the brig.

"You are sending me to my death as surely as you stand there," he said. "My doom is sealed. I won't be alive 24 hours after I arrive in Germany."

"I am old. I can be of no harm I have a wife. All we want is a little happiness. She can't go with me. You see, I have to leave her here."

Graves came to America 25 years ago. Then he was known as Trenton B. Snell, one of his many aliases. German officials said during the World War that his name by birth was Max Meincke.

In 1914 Graves said he came here under orders of the British government "to spy on a meeting the Government had reason to believe was to take place between an agent of Germany and Japan."

He insisted that he obtained copies of vital documents, but that England had not given him the agreed money.

Then came the highlight of Graves' career in America. He was arrested in Washington on the charge of having attempted to extort $3,000 from Countess von Bernstorff on the threat of publishing intercepted letters addressed to her. Count von Bernstorff, then ambassador, did not prosecute the case.

Slayer of Woman Confesses So Wife Can Get Back to Job

Tired Spouse Wins in 10 Minutes After Police Grill Suspect Six Hours in Vain; Victim Bludgeoned for Pieces of Silver.

By the United Press.

New York, April 13.—Canwell Leitch's feet tonight are on that long last mile that leads to the electric chair because a tired woman with a shawl around her head looked him in the eye and asked why he didn't confess to a murder so she could get back to work.

She was his wife.

Police brought her to the Staten Island station today after they had questioned Leitch for six hours, trying to trap him into admitting that he had killed Mrs. Gussie Dishler for the few pieces of silver she carried in her shabby purse.

Toils As Scrubwoman.

They brought her from the Mount Loretto home, a Catholic orphanage where she had worked as a cleaning woman since she and her husband separated a year ago.

It had been a weary session for the detectives. They were certain he had committed the murder, but he just blinked his eyes in the bright lights and kept saying, "I don't know anything about it."

So the detectives left Leitch alone in the room, and when the door opened again he saw his wife standing there with her hands, red and cracked from hard work, clutching the shawl at her throat. Police heard her say:

"Well, I see you're in trouble again."

Leitch mumbled something that couldn't be heard, and then Mrs. Leitch said:

"If you aren't guilty, what have they got you here for?"

Then the door closed. Ten minutes later it opened.

"All right; he'll tell the truth now," said Mrs. Leitch, hurrying toward the door.

Police said they obtained from Leitch a confession that he had beaten 61-year-old Mrs. Dishler to death Saturday night with a cane and a furnace shaker because she owed him money for odd jobs. He took the small amount of money he found in her purse, he said.

Mrs. Leitch didn't want to waste any time getting back to the job in the orphanage, but she did stop long enough to say:

"I told him what the cops had on him. I told him the only hope for him was to tell the truth. At first he wouldn't say a thing, but I said to him, 'Look here, I got work to do, and I won't get any rest if I have to sit here talking to you.' He said 'yeah, I guess I better tell the truth.'"

Weatherford Allen Funeral Rites Held

Funeral services were held yesterday in Rye, N. Y., for Weatherford T. Allen, 44, retired advertising man and broker and son of J. Walter Allen, of 1518 Webster street northwest. Burial will be in Nashville, Tenn.

Pope Promotes Two Professors At Catholic U.

Dr. Lardone and Dr. Healy Honored; Dr. Corrigan Also Elevated.

Two more members of the faculty of Catholic University—the Rev. Dr. Francisco G. Lardone, professor of Roman law, and the Rev. Dr. Patrick Joseph Healy, professor of church history—have been promoted by Pope Pius XI to the rank of domestic prelate of the papal household with the title if right reverened monsignor, it was announced yesterday.

Word of their elevation was received from Rome by the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States.

At the same time, word was received that the Right Rev. Joseph Moran Corrigan, S. T. D., rector of Catholic University, had been elevated to the rank of prothonary apostolic. This title gives Mgr. Corrigan permission to celebrate pontificial high mass four times a year, using the ring, pectoral cross, mitre and other ecclesiastical insignia. One other member of the faculty has enjoyed this privilege, the Right Rev. Edward A. Pace, now vice rector emeritus.

Mgr. Corrigan in Rome.

Mgr. Corrigan, who has been in Rome on university business since December, is expected to return to Washington late this month.

Mgr. Healy, elevated to the rank of monsignor, was born in Waterford, Ireland. He was educated at the Catholic University of America, where he received the degrees of bachelor of sacred theology in 1898, licentiate in sacred theology in 1899 and the doctorate in 1903. He was ordained in 1897 and became a member of the faculty of the university in 1905. He was advanced in rank from the status of instructor until he became a full professor in 1910 and at present holds the Patrick Quinn professorship of church history.

Mgr. Healy holds memberships in historical, political science and other learned societies and is the author of several books on religious and social questions.

Joined Faculty in 1924.

Mgr. Lardone, who holds the Patrick O'Brien professorship of Roman law, has been a member of the faculty of the Catholic University since 1924. He was born in Moretta, Cuneo, Italy, and received his education at the Pontifical Schools of Theology and Canon Law at Turin. He received his S. T. D. from the former in 1909 and the J. U. D. in 1912. He also attended the Royal University of Turin, where he received a diploma in paleography, diplomacy and archives in 1916. He was ordained June 29, 1910, and after serving as assistant pastor at Casselle Torinese and as chaplain in the Italian Red Cross he became associate editor of L'Osservatore Romano, the Vatican newspaper, which position he held from 1920 to 1928.

Dr. Lardone is the author of several works in the field of Roman law and is a contributor to the Georgetown, Boston University and University of Detroit law journals and the Air Law Review of New York University. He is honorary consultant in Roman law in the Library of Congress and a member of the Riccobono Seminar of Roman Law in Washington.

No date has been set for the formal investiture of the new prelates.

Britain, France Causing Bilbao 'Death,' Claim

Rebel Blockade May Cause Starvation of 450,000, Basque Leader Says.

By the United Press.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish frontier, April 13.—The Spanish Basque government warned tonight that death by starvation of thousands of women and children may "rest on the conscience" of Great Britain and France because of the rebel blockade around Bilbao.

A Basque spokesman, admitting 450,000 persons in and around Bilbao faced starvation because of the blockade, was indignant at Paris reports that the Basques will surrender to Gen. Emilo Mola's besieging rebel armies to avoid destruction of the city.

"Fight to the End."

"The Basque government will fight to the end to prevent the rebels from taking our capital, which has never known defeat in 300 years," he said.

Were it not for British and French decisions to "surrender to the rebel bluff," five British food ships now anchored at Saint Jean de Luz, France, could enter Bilbao and unload enough provisions to permit the Basques to "continue the fight for two more months," he said.

"We will soon be obliged to appeal to France and England to evacuate thousands of women and children to prevent their starving to death," he continued.

Predicts Revolution.

He predicted that, although the rebels might win on the battlefield, their victory would be upset by revolution among the famine-plagued people.

The population of Bilbao, normally 190,000 and dependent upon ship arrivals for foodstuffs because the Basque region is mainly a mining one, has been swelled to 340,000 by the influx of refugees from San Sebastian, Irun and other cities which have fallen to the rebels.

The populations of nearby towns bring the number of sufferers to around 450,000, all of whom are dependent on Bilbao for food.

Central Board Urged as Guide Of U. S. Women

United Front for National Issues Asked by Mrs. Eugene Meyer.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, April 13.—A central board of strategy, acting as a clearing house of ideas and as a steering committee for America's millions of organized women, was proposed here today by Mrs. Eugene Meyer before the Maryland Federation of Women's Clubs in the Lord Baltimore Hotel.

American women who wish to be heard quickly on any national issue, Mrs. Meyer said, could use such a central committee as a spearhead for their active participation in national events.

"In short," she said, "what I am proposing to you is another United Front—a United Front of the Women of America for the preservation of democracy."

A Nonpartisan Crusade.

As a practical illustration of what she had in mind, Mrs. Meyer suggested a nonpartisan crusade by women toward two related goals:

1. A balanced budget.
2. Reform of the civil service, in line with the plan submitted to Congress by President Roosevelt.

Both of these, Mrs. Meyer said, are protection against dictatorship. The chief characteristic of a dictator, she pointed out, is his ability to spend the country's tax money without being accountable to anyone. And without a trained and honest personnel to cope with the problems of modern government, she added, democracy is in peril.

Dismal Picture Pointed.

Mrs. Meyer painted a dismal picture of what has happened to women in those countries of the world where dictators have seized control.

"The world of dictatorship," she said, "is a masculine world in which woman's role is reduced to her biological function, and her rights as a human being, as a mother and as a citizen, have been made subservient to the so-called 'rights' of the state."

German women, she recalled, had started a movement before the advent of Hitler that was having a profound and wholesome influence on the country. Today, she said, they are reduced to what can only be called slavery, barred from public life and higher education and looked upon only as producers of cannon fodder. Much the same situation, she said, exists in Italy and Russia.

U. S. Home Best Organized.

"Now," Mrs. Meyer said, "the question I should like to ask you is this. With woman's fate in the European dictatorships as an abhorrent example, are we women who still live in a free country—are we doing our utmost to preserve that freedom? And if not, what excuse have we got? Not only are the women of America the most thoroughly organized but they have received the most encouragement to take a leading part in the political and social life of the Nation. There must be from 10,000,000 to 20,000,000 women in the large national organizations of which the Federation of Women's Clubs is among the most important. * * *"

Answering one objection usually made by a woman's organization—that it is not a political group—Mrs. Meyer said that today "all life is political." By this, she explained, she didn't mean partisan politics, adding that the major problems of the day transcend partisanship.

Answering a second objection—that women's organizations are too large to register their opinion in a moment of crisis—Mrs. Meyer outlined her proposal for united action when needed.

Advances Central Plan.

"That difficulty," she said, "can be overcome by foresight. What is there to prevent the most important women's organizations such as the Federation of Women's Clubs, the League of Women Voters, the Professional and Business Women's League, and the Association of University Women, to name but a few, from electing a central board which can act as a clearing house of ideas and a steeering committee.

"I know perfectly well how revolutionary the idea may sound, but such a board of strategy need not interfere in any of your local activites. And at the same time all the millions of women who wish to be heard quickly on any national issue could use such a central committee as a spearhead for their active participation in national events."

It might be objected, Mrs. Meyer said, that the various types of women's organizations could never agree on any single issue. She said she didn't believe this.

Textile Finding For Improving Industry Asked

By the Associated Press.

American delegates proposed yesterday the World Textile Conference make public a set of executive "findings" on how to improve the industry.

John G. Winant, conference president, suggested the term as a substitute for "resolutions" after hours of deadlocked debate behind closed doors.

He said the American proposal, which he believed the conference would accept, was for the purpose of putting the representatives from 24 countries on record with tangible ideas for use by the International Labor Conference in Geneva next June.

Government and employer delegates from Great Britain and Japan have been active holdouts against committing themselves to any conference document stipulating international rates of pay and hours of labor.

At the same time, they have been at loggerheads between themselves, as principal export rivals, over British suggestions that social and economic conditions in the Japanese industry be brought in line with British improvements.

D. E. Douty, American employers' adviser, proposed that the industry set up a system of international trade standards as an aid to fairer competition.

Winant said the conference was friendly toward Douty's theory that standards would find extensive use between buyers and sellers in establishing quality, obtaining competitive prices on a uniform basis and guaranteeing delivery in accordance with sales contracts.

Plane Record Claimed.

Monfalcone, Italy, April 13 (AP).—Mario Stoppani, Italian flier, claimed a world seaplane altitude record today for an ascent of approximately three miles with a 10-ton load.

Nice Will Veto Bill for Relief As Bookie Aid

lief by increasing the State tax law on real estate is unwise, as real estate is already overtaxed and should, in my opinion, be reserved as a source of revenue for the local, county and city governments.

"The policy as to the State tax on real estate should be downward, working to the ultimate goal of abolishing real property tax for State revenue as is the case in several States.

"As long as a special session has been called, it should be confined solely to the enactment of relief measures."

The legislators estimated their bill would produce $5,060,000 yearly. The Governor announced he was "convinced" it would raise only $3,585,000.

After issuing his formal statement, he added as an afterthought, that even his lower estimate probably would be lowered still further because the major race tracks probably would not accept the additional 20 days voted by the Legislatue as part of the relief bill.

There was little or no comment on the relief bill until yesterday. Since that time, however, various leaders of the State have given out public statements assailing the legislation of bookmaking and charging that the bill would not raise sufficient funds.

Blackmail Trial Delayed a Week

District Court Justice F. Dickinson Letts yesterday postponed for one week the trial of Mrs. Mary Krieger, 35, of Washington, and Samuel Leighton Frooks, of Jackson Heights, N. Y., who are under indictment on charges of conspiring to blackmail, and blackmailing, the late Carroll Pierce, Alexandria, Va., bank president.

The trial, set for yesterday, was postponed when Mrs. Krieger, who appeared in court with her attractive young daughter, said she wished to obtain an attorney other than the one selected by the court to represent her. She intimated she wished to get William E. Leahy, criminal attorney, and she asked Justice Letts to assign him to the case.

The Day We Celebrate.

Pan-American Day finds the 21 nations of the Western Hemisphere firmly at peace with one another. A quarter of a billion people go their ways without thought of war, except as it might spread from overseas.

Throughout the length and breadth of the New World there are no ghoulish parades of civilians in gas masks; no nerve-racking rehearsals of defense against airplane raids; no haunting terror of an impending cataclysm to darken the lives of whole peoples; no official glorification of war or studied hatred of neighbors. Peace in the Americas is more than a cherished ideal. It is a reality, secured by a common resolve to keep it so.

Yet the New World is no international Utopia. There are still many obstacles to the development of a family of nations among whose members fratricidal strife would be impossible. The sanguinary war of the Gran Chaco is a recent blot on an otherwise good record, though it is to the credit of neighboring states that the conflict was confined to the original combatants.

There remain a few disputed frontiers and other unsettled international controversies between states that might hold in them seeds of war if handled clumsily. There are sharp divisions along national lines on some very fundamental questions. For example, prevailing opinion in Brazil and Mexico differs widely on the Spanish civil war. A few dictators resort to some of the totalitarian tricks of the big bosses overseas.

But the Batistas and Trujillos and other caudillos of these times are scarcely potential Hitlers or Mussolinis. Whatever fire-eating or saber-rattling they attempt is for the benefit of the opposition at home and is without repercussion beyond their borders. Moreover, the inflammatory elements of demagogy, imperialism and militarism are happily restrained. And the troops of no American nation can be found anywhere on the soil of another.

For these reasons, the 21 republics of the New World have cause for more than a perfunctory celebration of this day. And the thanksgiving may well be shared by Canada, a "good neighbor" of them all.

Egypt At Montreux.

For some months, as a result of the Anglo-Egyptian treaty of last August, Egypt's status has been that of an independent nation. That fact is soon to be given international recognition by the admission of Egypt into the League of Nations.

Yet, as the Cairo government sees it, Egyptian sovereignty will remain incomplete so long as foreigners in Egypt continue to enjoy a special status and special rights are vouchsafed them by capitulations. Among these rights are immunity from personal taxation and trial in their own courts rather than in the courts of Egypt. Besides, Egypt is bound not to impose tariffs of more than 10 per cent on imports from capitulatory states while receiving no reciprocal concessions in return.

Not surprisingly, Egypt wants these special privileges eliminated. At its request a conference is now meeting at Montreux to consider the problem. Besides Egypt, 19 other powers are represented.

It is an interesting fact that in the last international conference at Montreux, Turkey, for many centuries Egypt's suzerain, won the right to fortify the Dardanelles and the Straits of Bosphorus. Egypt is hopeful that she, too, will be given full freedom of action regarding all matters within her jurisdiction. There can be no doubt that some of the capitulatory powers will put up a fight to prevent elimination of a system favorable to their nationals. But the times are against them. While Egypt may not succeed in winning general consent for a complete and immediate end of capitulations her efforts are certain to be crowned with a large measure of success.

The continuation of extraterritorial rights has in this day and age become an anachronism. Extraterritoriality was once the accepted rule for foreigners in the Ottoman Empire, in Siam, Japan, China and elsewhere. Now the system survives only in Egypt and China and in the latter country it no longer applies to the nationals of many countries. Its elimination both in Egypt and in China is only a matter of time.

Unsettled Issues.

Despite their obvious long-range importance, the group of decisions upholding the Wagner act leaves unsettled many issues in the field of industrial relations. It would be idle to suppose, for instance, that of themselves these opinions assure peaceful negotiated settlement of labor disputes.

The Supreme Court's verdict that Federal control over industry may extend to manufacturing industries under certain conditions implies a liberalized definition of interstate commerce. It suggests that the road is now open for Federal regulation of wages, hours and conditions of work on a broad scale.

At the moment, however, all that has been obtained is complete recognition of the right of organized labor groups to bargain collectively free from employer interference. The principle of majority rule is also accepted—the employer must deal with the representatives of a majority of his employes. The rights of the minority, whether an independent or a company union, are limited to presentation of grievances.

Since a large proportion of recent strikes have resulted from disputes over union recognition and charges of discrimination, the court's decision should eliminate one prolific cause of disputes. On the other hand, attempts to enforce the principle of majority rule are likely to create grave problems for the National Labor Relations Board. With the A. F. of L. and C. I. O. unions both claiming the right to represent the workers in various industries, the NLRB may find itself compelled to intervene in factional disputes often more bitter and irreconcilable than those arising between employers and employes.

In calling a conference of representatives of labor and management to discuss the joint problems that lie ahead Secretary of Labor Perkins has therefore taken a constructive position. Now that the way has been cleared for bona fide collective bargaining, the next steps are to make both sides appreciate the advantages of peaceful negotiation, to encourage them to utilize the existing machinery for mediation and conciliation, and to consider the need for improved mechanism.

If the Administration is contemplating an extension of Federal regulatory laws to cover hours, wages and conditions of labor in a comprehensive way, Federal enforcement and mediatory machinery will likewise have to be extended and improved. Even without such an enlargement of the scope of Federal laws, however, the Wagner act would be greatly strengthened by the addition of provisions for mediation and investigation of the causes of disputes, perhaps along the lines of the railway labor act. If strikes were forbidden until the mediatory efforts of the NLRB had been exhausted and the results of an official inquiry were made known, many potential disturbances would blow over.

It is also highly desirable that the one-sided provisions of the Wagner act, banning unfair employer tactics, should be supplemented by prohibitions against unfair employe actions. Employer co-operation in giving effect to collective bargaining under the act would be much more wholehearted if there were assurance that the responsibility of organized labor would be made equally explicit.

The sit-down strike, for instance, is a form of lawlessness enabling a minority of workers to defeat the will of a majority and thereby circumvent the principle of majority rule embodied in the Wagner act. Revision of the act is required to provide an effective defense against tactics of this sort. And if the NLRB is to work effectively for industrial peace it may need to be empowered to intervene in disputes instead of merely acting in a judicial capacity upon presentation of complaints by aggrieved persons.

Not Yet Ready.

It has not usually been a British habit to retreat in the face of a threat of force. Yet Great Britain has done this twice during the past two years.

She did it at the time of the Italo-Ethiopian war. Then a formidable fleet was mobilized in the Mediterranean. But realizing that any real attempt to coerce Italy might lead to war, Great Britain fought shy of strong measures. Now the British government has again decided that discretion is the better part of valor.

On repeated occasions the Spanish rebel government has been warned that any interference with British shipping would not be tolerated. A test came when four British ships loaded with food recently sought entry into Bilbao Harbor, which the rebels have blockaded.

Two courses were then open to the London government. Either it could recognize the blockade as legitimate, which would involve de facto recognition of the belligerency of the Spanish insurgents, or the rebel attempt to interfere with British shipping could be dispersed.

As at the time of the Ethiopian war, Britain's initial response was a show of force. The giant battleship H. M. S. Hood was rushed to the Biscay coast. Having done this, however, and having put on record a declaration that Great Britain "cannot tolerate any rebel interference with British shipping at sea," the government proceeded to warn British shipping "that in view of the conditions at present prevailing in the neighborhood of Bilbao they should not, for practical reasons, and in view of the risks against which it is at present impossible to protect them, go into that area."

Thus the British stand comes close to recognizing the blockade at Bilbao even while denying that under no circumstances will this be done. This is reminiscent of the casuistry so frequently found in the statements made by Sir John Simon, during his unfortunate term as foreign secretary. And it is a fair guess that the wavering attitude will continue until—but not after—Britain's rearmament program is complete.

An Objective Analysis.

To what extent has the United States recovered from the depression? What are the prospects for further recovery?

Regarding these questions a continuous debate has raged in this country. More often than not it has been conducted on a strongly partisan basis, productive of heat rather than light. For this reason Americans as well as Englishmen will examine with interest the findings of H. C. Chalkley, Commercial Counselor to the British Embassy here. A well-informed and impartial outsider, with no ax to grind and no ulterior purpose to advance, Mr. Chalkley presents in his "Report on Economic and Commercial Conditions in the United States of America," a comprehensive survey of the scene as he found it last December.

It is this observer's considered view that the United States was then in a very favorable economic position. We were, in his opinion, in a position to regain "all the real economic prosperity attained in 1929 and in some directions" to exceed it. His view of the American industrial situation was equally optimistic. Said he:

> Judged by any of the accepted criteria—production, earnings, profits and dividends, pay rolls, re-employment of labor, new products and processes—United States industry has reached a stage of substantial and it would seem assured recovery which has been decidedly more pronounced in 1936 than in any previous year, with a further advance in 1937, possibly regaining the 1929 level, not appearing to be precluded by the prospect of any internal setback or even of financial and war disturbances in Europe.

For this recovery he gives the Administration full credit. "That part of the New Deal which was directed to the relief of distress and to national economic recovery," he says, "has been successful." He also finds much to commend in the Government's currency devaluation move and in the policy of reflation by public spending.

On the other hand, he inclines to the view that the invalidation of the NRA and the AAA by the Supreme Court stimulated recovery, in this respect taking a position similar to that expounded by the Brookings Institution in one of its recent reports.

Despite his optimism regarding the American economic situation generally, he does not fail to point out certain pitfalls which may menace further recovery. The failure of re-employment to keep pace with increased industrial production he considers one of the darkest spots in the picture. Another danger zone is the budgetary situation. Balancing of the Federal budget, he believes, is our "principal and immediate task."

Then there is the lag in foreign trade which may prove a serious handicap once American agriculture begins to produce surpluses again. In this connection he is warm in his praise of the Hull reciprocal tariff policy which he considers a success. Finally, he qualifies his optimism by pointing out the possibilities of an "uncontrollable speculative inflation of security and real estate values."

But by and large, the outlook for the United States, as Mr. Chalkley finds it, is fundamentally encouraging. Coming as it does from one who has been watching the American situation as a trained and detached observer, this comment should be heartening to Americans and to millions outside our borders who are directly or indirectly affected by the economic condition here.

Viewing With Alarm.

Our attention has been called to a news item that gives us grave concern. It is one of those insidious dangers that creep upon society to puncture its complacency. It is one of those ironic jokes the point of which is never seen until it is felt.

Beyond question something ought to be done, and done at once. But nothing will be done. In the late Nineties, when the menace last appeared, there was talk of preventive legislation. Bills were actually presented in city councils and State Legislatures. But they were never passed. Man, the poor fish, never had the nerve to put them over.

Unhappily those who appreciate this threat to peace at its full iniquity will be given scant attention. They will promptly be set down by the younger generation as old fogeys. Well, the young people will have to find out for themselves. And the men need expect no help from the women. The women are thoroughly case-hardened. If they want this item they are going to have it, no matter how many hospital cases it may cause.

What is the item? Oh, quite a simple little thing:

"Fancy hatpins are revived as the contemporary ornaments for sailor hats. Big pearl-topped ones——"

Nature has already begun to adapt the human species to three-story sandwiches. For examples, look at Joe E. Brown and Martha Raye.

Cherry Trees And Shrines.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
It is with dismay that we have read of the threatened destruction of the lovely cherry trees, appreciated and admired by the man in the street as much as by the trained artist.

Surely Thomas Jefferson would have preferred them to any memorial that can be built.

Washington lacks a large and imposing triumphal arch such as beautifies several European cities. Why not erect one at the entrance to Potomac Park? It would honor Jefferson and spare the cherry blossoms!

F. A. CHAPMAN.
Winchester, Va., April 9.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
Among the different considerations involved in the Jefferson Memorial proposal, the site alluded to in your issue of April 7, which seems to have the favor of the memorial committee, will create widespread consternation. Nothing would compensate, not even a Jefferson Monument, for the destruction of the Tidal Basin section of Washington.

Why not consider a site appropriately below the Memorial Bridge and facing the Theodore Roosevelt bird sanctuary island. A Jefferson Memorial would reign supreme there, which it never could do in the park section.

Replies To "J. C. R.'s" Letter.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
It is not surprising that "J. C. R." did not sign his name to a letter so prejudiced and unfair as his of April 5. He says: "There is no analogy between Washington and Lee. Gen. Washington was a rebel who was fighting to establish and maintain a democracy • • • Lee • • • defied the Government for an empty cause, and by all the rules of civilized warfare he should have been executed."

Henderson, in "Stonewall Jackson and the American Civil War," has this to say on the subject of secession: "When, in process of time, the history of secession comes to be viewed with the same freedom from prejudice as the history of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, it will be clear that the fourth great revolution of the English-speaking race differs in no essential characteristic from those which preceded it. It was not simply because the five members were illegally impeached in 1642, the seven bishops illegally tried in 1688, men shot at Lexington in 1775, or slavery threatened in 1861, that the people arose. These were the occasions, not the causes, of revolt. In each case a great principle was at stake: In 1642 the liberty of the subject; in 1688 the integrity of the Protestant faith; in 1775 taxation only with the consent of the taxed; in 1861 the sovereignty of the individual States."

"J. C. R." goes on to say: "Conditions reached the stage where armed conflict was inevitable not only because of the corrupt plantation system of agriculture, but because the factory system in New England had reached the stage of development where the interests of the Northern bourgeoise conflicted with the interests of the Southern slave owners and it was impossible for the two social systems to exist side by side without the absorption of one by the other." True, it was a conflict between two opposing social systems; but it is by no means true that the factory system of New England, based on an industrial slavery more cruel and heartless than Negro slavery, was a superior civilization. The Negro slave was property, and as such was taken care of, and given a home in his old age. The New England factory hand worked 12 or 14 hours a day at starvation wages, and when worn out was discarded like an old piece of machinery.

If the value of a social system is to be measured by the quality of the men it produces, then the South compares more than favorably with any other section of the country. From colonial days to the Civil War the ablest statesmen, generals and Presidents were Southerners. One has only to call to mind Patrick Henry, George Mason, Jefferson, Richard Henry Lee, Francis Lightfoot Lee, Washington, "Light Horse Harry" Lee, and Francis Marion, to realize that had it not been for the South the Revolution would never have succeeded—probably never even have started.

"J. C. R."'s description of Lee as "muddled" is original, to say the least. If Lee was muddled what can be said of the Northern generals who opposed him, and whom he outwitted and defeated for four years until overwhelmed by superior numbers? McClellan after the Seven Days Battle, Burnside at Fredericksburg, Pope at the battle of Second Bull Run, Hooker at Chancellorsville, and Grant after the Wilderness Campaign would hardly have thought of him as muddled. The word more aptly describes them.

MARY B. OWEN.
Washington, April 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
When a fellow's 10 years old he thinks his grandfather's a fool. When he's 20 years old he thinks his father is a fool. When he's 40 years old he knows he's a fool himself.

Now a man in his seventh decade, though he may have reached the last degree of understanding, can at least remember other times; and he knows that this is a crazy age when almost anything can be said, written or perpetrated on paper or canvas and receive respectful attention.

I have in mind a letter signed "J. C. R.," whom I take to be under 40.

He appears to have a distaste for the "professional Southerner" who does not use his intellect (God save the mark!), which "J. C. R." evidently does, and it is to be suspected that he is inclined to rub it into the unintellectual one when he says: "Lee was a fine, muddled gentleman of the old school, who defied the Government for an empty cause, and by all the rules of 'civilized' warfare he should have been executed." He has allowed his intellect to be submerged by his rhetoric. "Muddled"? His was one of the clearest minds of the time—one of the few that grasped the situation. "Empty cause"? Further on in the letter it is said, evidently quoting: "It was impossible for the two social systems to exist side by side without one absorbing the other." Where on earth was or is there a people so feeble as to submit to absorption without a struggle? That is what the South feared—loss of independence and identity and exploitation by an alien people.

It seems that only of late years have the historians at the North become aware of this, and they found it vastly interesting. And who ever heard of any rule of war enjoining or permitting the execution of an adversary save for crimes against the rules themselves? The charge became treason, and that failed for lack of law. Such executions are stupid and barbarous and beget hate, than which there is no greater social and spiritual evil. As for the origins of the war and its fruits, there has been nothing new to tell for years; if we don't know now we never will. The important thing is not who did it, but what did it; and so we may learn what manner of things we are—maybe.

All of this screed is not specially concerned with war, but with the chaos and looseness of thinking peculiar to these times and the yielding of former standards and beliefs to a sterile and mechanical thing called intellectualism. If you want concrete (pardon me!) evidence, behold the parks!

Peace Plan.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
The issue of world peace is coincident of the problem of distribution of material supply. In the interest of both universal tranquility and world prosperity, England and France should give certain colonies to Germany and Italy, as a source of raw materials and for purpose of emigration. But unless this were effected without permitting the latter countries to expand their military strength at the expense of a peace-loving world, the German-Italian menace to international security will continue to grow.

Let the United States propose to Russia, England and France the following: That in consideration of the French and British war debts, the latter countries shall cede to the American Government important geological territory over which protectorates would be established. Russia could co-operate in populating the colonies with German and Italian immigrants, providing homes, food and clothing for them.

Neither Nazi nor Soviet propaganda would be permitted, the supreme aim being the creation of new nations free of dictation by Russia, Germany or Italy—the people choosing their own form of government. No weapons of war would be allowed, except in the hands of American marines or police under American control.

Germany and Italy would be given desirable natural resources, upon which a tax would be imposed until Russia had been repaid, and the war debts of Germany and Italy, plus whatever expenses had been incured by us had been liquidated.

To those statesmen who say this proposal is impracticable at the present stage of history, I answer that all progress comes from taking new and daring steps.

A Safety Suggestion.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
Congratulations to The Post for its intensive Safety Driving Crusade.

If it were possible to enlist the co-operation of automobile manufacturers in a more determined support of this campaign, greater progress would be made. It has occurred to me that if in the reporting of accidents the makes of the cars were mentioned, the manufacturers might be sufficiently agitated to stimulate the purchasers of their cars to safer driving. This could be done through safe-driving lessons, and safety talks with detailed illustration, and safety literature, free but compulsory to all purchasers.

It is taken for granted that accidents seldom result from faults in car mechanism. It is the driver who needs to be made more perfect in the handling of the mechanism.

Would not this be a concrete way of attacking the trouble more or less at the source?

More On the Civil War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
As a member of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, I would like to say to Mr. McCall that we of the Southland have no need to be informed that the War is over.

It has taken us nearly a century to struggle up from the devastation and destruction in the wake of the Northern Army after its invasion of our fair land. What you need is a broader vision and a wider horizon.

I think you may have forgotten the last visit to our National Capital of the Grand Army of the Republic, when you say the North has forgotten the War. They voted down the suggestion of the reunion of the Blue and the Gray at Gettysburg, and bitterly condemned the erection of a statue of Lee at Arlington, which we are getting notwithstanding their opposition.

A VIRGINIAN.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

It's Not Ethical.

The recent scuffle between two baseball journalists and an unknown number of St. Louis ball players in the lobby of a Tampa hotel seems to call for a statement of newspaper ethics covering such cases.

Incensed at some comment written by Jack Miley of the New York News, Dizzy Dean took a poke at my colleague and a hearty melee ensued. No damage was done and Mr. Miley's jovial account of the row was free of rancor—wherein he met with honor the severe test of his ability and sportsmanship and earned a gold star for his report card.

Other members of the craft however, have felt a rise of the clan spirit, and there are indications that Dean in particular and the Cardinals in general will be victims of a journalistic vendetta this summer. Bad as this might be for Dizzy and the Cardinals, it would be even worse for journalism, because it would indicate to the public that newspaper people are not above using their position and the privilege of a free press to flog an enemy in print for private reasons. Although there are members of the trade who do not know as much, this sort of thing is indecent and harmful to the newspaper business, for it is closely akin to intimidation and a first cousin to blackmail.

There has been much of this persecution in recent years, not particularly on the sport side but flagrantly in the coverage of the amusement trades. It comes of the introduction into newspaper work of men and women without the slightest conception of newspaper ethics and responsibility who are given a daily column of space and carte blanche to destroy or praise, according to their own godlike whims.

• • • •

Very often, so deep is their ignorance of the first principles of the business, they blandly admit they use their space to discipline people who displease them and favor those who flatter their sense of power and importance.

It is not uncommon that a certain artist is a hit or a ginmill a success thanks solely to the generous mention of the same in print—a system which obviously opens the way to graft and coercion.

It should be noted, in fact, that real, professional newspaper people look upon these strange creatures as parasitic intruders and marvel hopelessly at the amazing effrontery of writers who use their newspaper space to advertise outside personal enterprises.

• • • •

If a ball player has thrown down his club or made a crooked deal, as has happened many times, the baseball writers are not only privileged but bound to report the fact to the best of their ability, and in such cases a campaign of harassment is not amiss. If a prize fight matchmaker, in a position of trust, owns fighters in the name of a dummy manager and gives them bouts to the exclusion of better men, as happens often, the case again calls for vigorous treatment.

But a public fracas between a public man and a reporter should have no more effect on the policy of the press than a fight between the same man and some stranger who refused to give his name.

And let's abolish the idea that publicity made Dizzy Dean and that he owes the papers gratitude for that. It was Dizzy who made publicity, and we wrote him into prominence to cover the news, provide entertainment, strut our stuff and sell newspapers.

British Lad's Questions.

Q. Why is the Government giving Army recruits a special diet?

A. To make them fit and strong.

Q. Why?

A. To fight somebody, I suppose.

Q. Why weren't they fit and strong before?

A. Because they didn't have enough to eat when they were children.

Q. Why didn't the Government give them a special diet then?

A. Because nobody realized they would be wanted as soldiers.

Q. Does the Government only feed people up when they've got to fight somebody?

A. Obviously.

Q. If they had been given a special diet when they were children, would they be fit and strong now?

A. Yes; and half as big again. There would also be enough recruits to fill the Army twice over.

Q. Why?

A. Because all those rejected as unfit would be fit.

Q. Well, if they fed all the children now, they would have plenty of soldiers when they grow up, wouldn't they?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, why don't they do it?

A. Because that would be waste of money.

Q. Why?

A. You can't expect the Government to feed children who may not be wanted as soldiers.

BOOKS

A Mid-Week Review of Current Publications

The Art of Reviewing

By Theodore Hall.

GRAY-HAIRED already is the theory that the way to review a book is to answer the three questions: What did the author intend? Did he accomplish it? Was it worth doing anyway? That, with filigrees, is what they will teach you in courses in literary criticism. And perfectly valid it is, had you but world enough and time, and were your readers really interested in your locating a book accurately upon the ladder of literature. But when Mr. Winchell or Mr. McIntyre is holding forth in the adjacent column, to cling solely to the classic method of criticism is like choosing a Henley singles scull for the descent of the Athabaska River.

In this, I think, the public has cause for complaint. Too often reviewers forget that the daily newspaper is neither a book journal nor even a book section. Not one in 500 newspaper readers, on the average, will ever set eyes on the book in question — hence that very common brand of reviewing which merely characterizes the text as "fascinating" or "impressive" scarcely makes horse-sense. Not one in a hundred cares for books, or knows about them, in any informed, familiar way.

So it is quite beside the point to expect from the daily reviewer that weighty and considered judgment which is proper to a literary magazine, or that expert knowledge and detached perspective which befits some solemn quarterly. He should not, at his best, even be writing newspapers in his field as Walter Lippmann or Dorothy Thompson do in theirs. That unsalted portentousness is not for him.

No, the daily reviewer is blood-cousin to such true columnists as Heywood Broun and Westbrook Pegler. He is the layman at large in the realm of books, a voyager and a taster, all-curious, unappeased, skeptical and yet quick to honest enjoyment. No scholar, he will know and love many old books. No specialist, he will have zest for many subjects. He must be opinionated and unabashed, valiant with both wreath of orchids and pot of lampblack.

• • • •

WHEN I came down with a case of the spleen, I let my readers know it. Then, if they chose, they could themselves look into Mr. Dreiser's book of dreadful verse, or the tenuous saccharinities of Mr. Woollcott, or the preposterous mystical volumes of Dr. Alexander Cannon, M. D., D. P. M., Ph. D., F. R. G. S., and form their own opinions. I wasn't going to relapse into sweet nothings over such as these. Jacket quotations from English reviewers invariably gave me the pip, and I took great joy in publicly smoking out their exaggeration. At this moment I could name four of my British confreres, famous in their own right as authors, whose opinion of a book's merit I wouldn't believe upon a stack of Bibles. The oppressively current hallelujahs of several American reviewers likewise came in, at times, for a bit of deflating.

All such pot-shots are quite as much fun for the reader as for the columnist. Admittedly they are prejudices. But it is prejudice which holds salt. I thank God, as was said long ago, that I have not an altogether open mind.

On the other side of the picture, enthusiasms are to be spoken just as clearly, not in grand and general words of praise but in a recording of personal experience: of the exact species of laughter or aching throat, of pulse or suspense, of admiration for intelligence and poise and style and the lesser intangibles which form our reception of a book. Yet no reader will care very long for a Delphic oracle hidden behind a veil.

• • • •

LET me duck my head from the brick-bats my brethren are sure to hurl, and tell you what happens too often. A reviewer finishes a book one evening and finds himself pretty well pleased with it. But merely to say as much in print, merely to content himself with moderate words, will not seem very distinguished to him. So, scratching his head, he drags out his "Thesaurus" and cooks up several flashy phrases glowing with an emotion proper only to the advent of the Millenium. And the publishers, being humanly grateful, pick out his gaudiest sentence and spread it, with credit line to the gentleman, in their advertising from coast to coast.

Is the gentleman pained? By no means. He had his eye there all the time. No balm from Gilead could be more soothing to his ego. And really, it is a mess of pottage. Let such a reviewer be assured that he is doing what he can never afford to do—he is spoiling the trust in him of his best and wisest readers. And more, every fellow book-reviewer knows precisely what he is up to.

But this, remember, is all of the impressionable reviewer's own doing. So far as I have ever heard or known myself, the publishers exert absolutely no pressure on the reviewer. He can pan a book to Halifax and back and never a peep will come from them, nor will they slacken on their review copies to him. This, I think, is extraordinarily to their credit.

Fiction, last year, made up considerably less than a fifth of the publishers' lists, yet most daily columnists seem to spend fully half their time on novels. This can hardly be for the reason that they like htem. Several reviewers have confessed to me, and I know it is true for myself, that no department of letters palls so quickly on the steady reader as does straight fiction. Rather there is here the sign, and I am sure that Lewis Gannett, at least, would agree, of entirely too much public emphasis on the incessant and multitudinous "novel of the day."

I adduce Mr. Gannett because, alone among the more famous book columnists, he occasionally reviews garden books. Gardening happens to be a hobby of his, and therein lies a token For although the devotee of pure literature might not warm to garden books and kindred small lines, I see it as tolerably possible that the man in the street—who, after all, is my reader—might be quite as glad to hear about a good book on his hobby or special interest, or on what tomorrow may become his hobby, as he would be to have a critique of the latest novel in the William Faulkner school.

• • • •

CONCERNING letters from readers, the great majority were astonishingly kind. Yet considering the public show that the daily reviewer makes of himself, it cannot be said that his readers exactly flock to their ink-wells. There was, for example, the inexplicable day when my typewriter made Dostoievski the author of "Anna Karenina." Precisely eight people—and a questionnaire sent out by the paper indicated that I had some 40,000 regular readers out of a circulation of 100,000—wrote to tell me that the book was really by Tolstoi. If a sports page with an audience of 40,000 put "Dizzy" Dean by mistake on the Washington Senators, the sports editor would receive at least 500 proudly knowledgeable letters. So the trickle of letters from readers was that much the more valued.

Surprisingly, there were far more letters from authors the country over. Apparently these sensitive gentry lay a book on the public counter and then dodge apprehensively back to shelter, for a mere decently appreciative review will bring them to their fountain-pens to compose the friendliest possible letters. I should imagine that it would be a chore like a bride's thank-you letters over and over again, but nothing of that ever shows in their words.

Myth, indeed, may have it that authors look upon a reviewer with the emotion owing to a wood-tick. In reality, when he meets them, they will in half an hour make him feel as if he were their long-lost nephew or brother. I dare say this is because they can be really confident that he reads their books—nothing is so mellowing to an author's heart. And, despite the labor to which their collective verbosity put me, I can say that I had rather meet an author than eat. Encounters with them are the pure frosting on the job of reviewing.

Brogan Poems

"Louise Brogan: The Sleeping Fury." (Scribner's, $2.50.)

In this slim volume Louise Brogan not only retains the high rating her two previous books have given her, but she takes another step forward in her direction. Here she gives her individualistic poetical touch an all-high altitude. Her poems possess quiet vigor appropriately designated by the title, "The Sleeping Fury." They do justice to the veneer of modern sophiscation.

Her "Hypocrite Swift" is a study of subtlety in which she brings the dean to task in a manner that will prove delightful to the initiated. As a matter of fact, all her poems are for a select group of the initated.

The Mighty Drama of Biography

Historians of 'Particular Men's Lives' Engages Edgar Johnson.

By Howland H. Sargeant.

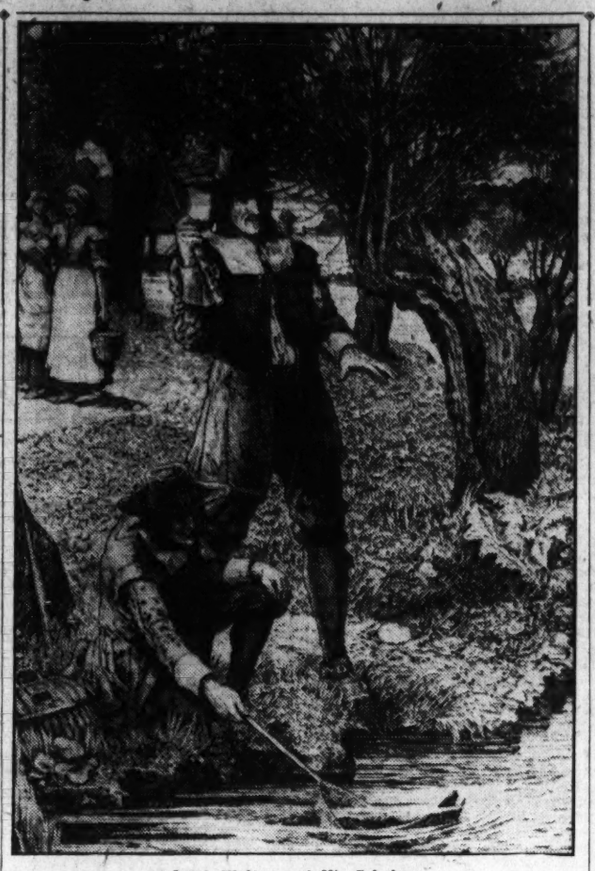
The Restoration poet and critic, John Dryden, coined the word "biography." In the preface to his translation of Plutarch, he defined it as "the history of particular men's lives. The pageantry of life is taken away: you see the poor reasonable animal as naked as nature ever made him: are made acquainted with his passions and his follies: and find the demi-god a man." To a generation accustomed to romanticized biography and the now moribund school of debunking, this seems entirely reasonable.

It is the growth of biography as a living art that Mr. Johnson analyzes over a period of more than 400 years. He confines his study to English biography (although a few interlopers like Mme. de Sevigne, Henry Adams, Andre Maurois, Van Wyck Brooks and Lincoln Steffens give the magic countersign and are admitted). To him, biography is personal history, since the processes of history clothe themselves in human lives. His canvas is the whole panorama of history from the first beginnings of true English biography in the reign of Henry VIII to the present day. His book is in part an attempt to "reflesh the skeletal structure of history," and for that purpose he leans heavily upon the theory that a given individual may concentrate within himself the convictions and the passions of his age.

In the chapter on "Autobiography and Personality," the lives of Lord Herbert, John Bunyan, Colley Cibber and Edward Gibbon are used as mirrors of the historical trends of the period. We pass from Elizabethan exuberance and versatility to the struggles with sin and Satan which marked the penetration of the Protestant Reformation among the humbler classes. Colley Cibber's "Apology for His Life" gives the opposite side of the same period, with its skepticism, frivolity, and the slightly cynical worldiness of its materialism, while Gibbon's autobiography carries us on to the epicureanism of the Classic Age—sober, balanced, calm.

It is by means of such a selection that Mr. Johnson attempts to sample characteristic flavors of an age, but there is the weakness that he sometimes prods Pegasus a little too far, and attempts to find in given individuals too much of the temper of an age. The transition from the Age of Reason to the Age of Romanticism undoubtedly meant that the authority of the inner, as, opposed to the outer, world was felt with renewed force. But his interpretation of the lives of Byron, Shelley and Keats places almost exclusive stress on their "awareness of a tension between the inner and the outer world" and their regard for the inner world as infinitely more important. He seems to overlook important factors both in the germination of romanticism itself and in the lives of these three poets.

Mr. Johnson subjects biography to a critical interpretation as well. He sets as the aims and standards of this art truth to the character of the human life it portrays, significance and individualization. Above all, it must embody in an esthetic form some elements of the universal through particulars. He is at his best in a form of criticism all too often entirely neglected. He attempts to dig down to the very roots of our different forms of biography, and to help the reader toward an understanding of biography by a brief survey of how this form first came to be written in England. The first biography of a layman is that of King Alfred, written in Latin by his bishop, Asser. Progressing through a welter of saints' lives and stories of the martyrs, in the reign of Henry VIII we find the first sustained narratives of individual lives written in the English language.



Izaak Walton and His Scholar.

Although he does not mention Nicholas Harpsfield's "Life of Sir Thomas More," which has been called the first scholarly biography extant in English, Mr. Johnson makes a very interesting comparison between the art of biography as practiced in the days of its earliest beginnings and in the present day. His standards are George Cavendish's "Life of Wolsey" and Lytton Strachey's "Cardinal Manning." Here we have two biographies, both dealing with princes of the church, yet written 400 years apart. There are two essential differences: Cavendish does not underline and point his material for us as Strachey does; we always feel the presence of the modern biographer just behind the scenes, but Cavendish is so retiring that we are seldom aware of him at all.

Biography, to Mr. Johnson, is not restricted to the form itself. Everything which reveals a personality and casts light upon the age is grist to his mill. Therefore, we have the memoirs of Col. Hutchinson and the life of the Duke of Newcastle, together with the diary of Evelyn (in stiff collar) and its antithesis, Pepys (in "spiritual undress"). We have Boswell's "Life of Johnson" and the letters of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu. There are interesting sidelights on the growth of the art of biography. How many people know that Izaak Walton, the great angler, was the earliest English biographer to quote letters written by his characters, and that William Mason in his "Life of Thomas Gray" was the first to make systematic use of them?

By the turn of the century, Mr. Johnson has surveyed a vast field of biography under a multitude of Protean forms. In our times, he finds the critical biography (anticipated by Boswell's "Life of Johnson") often merging into the biography of social criticism, as in Van Wyck Brooks' study of Mark Twain. Biography has become international, and the novelized biography has made its appearance. The school of debunking has played the part of the devil's advocate and has bequeathed a disinterested willingness to subject any personality to a true critical examination. The most significant of all contemporary developments, however, in his opinion, is the attempt to regard biography as a true work of literary art and to write and judge it by artistic standards, and he attributes to Lytton Strachey much of the present high status of biography as a form of literary art.

The earlier works of Andre Maurois violated the compact which the good biographer makes with his reader: that he shall use his imagination creatively to synthesize character, but that he shall not invent material. Maurois, the great exponent of the romanticized method, is criticized because he does not penetrate into the characters of men who were profoundly different from himself, but only imagines himself enacting their lives and their characters. Another type of contemporary biography influenced by Strachey is that of Philip Guedalla, of whom it is said that he "might have been twice as good a biographer had he been only half as witty." This is a legitimate criticism, but perhaps his work hardly deserves the scathing epithet of "meretricious", simply because, in Mr. Johnson's opinion, his writings are nothing but a platform for a personal monologue. Some of Mr. Johnson's anger seems attributable to Guedalla's disregard for biography as a great art in itself, but "only an annex to the great house of archives, which is history." There is unconscious irony in the use of this figure of speech. Mr. Guedalla once used a similar figure in a London talk. He criticized the cant which held that writers like James Joyce and D. H. Lawrence had enlarged the scope of the novel by their unabashed audacity in dealing with the most intimate details of life, "unless it is in the same way that we might enlarge the scope of a house by removing the bathroom door."

If biography can show in the lives of certain individuals the deepest convictions and the strongest passions of an age, what men can we select as typical of our own times? The men of science, the engineers and the industrialists have been dominant in making the modern world. Yet, they do not reveal their motivation, their view of world processes, nor do they state either an intellectual or emotional philosophy. For that reason, Mr. Johnson turns to other witnesses—"the nay-sayer and student." He chooses D. H. Lawrence and Lincoln Steffens as symbols of this present day. These are his reasons: Lawrence is essentially the great life-adventurer, the poet of rebellious social theory; his supreme mission is to deny the god of the machine. Lawrence is the great critic of contemporary society, but Lincoln Steffens is the great life-observer. He analyzes the world which Lawrence rejected, he studies its physiology and he even finds the good in the machine.

Through the 400 years during which Mr. Johnson has traced the development of biography, he finds no marked advance in it as an art. Today, he predicts that biography will continue to show an emergent tendency to divergence, that in the the future we will have new forms of biographical specialization. Just as we moved from the reverent and formalized saint's life to the unawed and sensational debunking biography, and have had industrial biographies and sociological biographies and psycho-analytical biographies, so in the future biographie's will be written to reveal the effects of environment and prevailing activities on character. We will study the influence of internal secretions on personalities and behavior. In short, just as Dryden anticipated by several hundred years what biography would become in our generation, Wordsworth more than a century ago may have predicted the course of biography from its present level, when he wrote that the literary artist may employ "the remotest discoveries of the chemist, the botanist or the mineralogist."

Court Defense

"RIGHTS OF AMERICANS," by William H. Murray. (Meador Publishing Co., $.50.)

The controversy centering around the Supreme Court has elicited this modest defense, bordering on the rhetorical at times, based upon the proposition that the Supreme Court is the ultimate safeguard of the constitutional liberties of the American people.

"Alfalfa Bill," the author, is a Democrat, but he is by no means sympathetic to the President's Court change plan, chiefly because he sees in it the beginning of the end of American liberties, but also because it embodies a definite disavowal of the hands-off policy, which disavowal can but lead to an American dictatorship.

Unfortunately, in spite of the evident sound approach to the problem, the work is a little unconvincing. This is due unquestionably to the lack of pains in its composition. It seems to be something just dashed off, and suffers thereby. But no one can doubt the sincerity of the work, nor overlook the fundamental soundness of the thesis.

"The Women"

"THE WOMEN," by Clare Boothe. (Random House, $2.)

Here is Clare Boothe's play in which she more than demonstrated that it doesn't take men to make boxoffice receipts. Forty characters, all women, have been holding Broadway's attention for many months and the book, even without benefit of stage setting and spoken lines, is a wow!

Unique among authors, Mrs. Boothe realizes that her heroine is a fool. But perhaps even her oversupply of "sugar content" wouldn't stand out so appallingly if all the other characters weren't just so many sour grapes.

If you can't afford a ticket to New York to see this play, buy this book! And even if you did see it, buy the book anyway. Then you'll be sure to get that line you lost when s mebody unwrapped a chocolate from a cellophane wrapper.

Torch-passing note: Isobel Field, the stepdaughter of Robert Louis Stevenson, whose autobiography Longmans, Green have published under the title, "This Life I've Loved," recently sent to her publishers the following note: "In looking over some old papers I came across a letter from Longmans, Green from England, signed by Mr. Longmans himself (it was addressed to my mother): 'You will be agreeably surprised at the size of the inclosed cheque, so much money for such a little book'" . . . Characteristic Flavors of An Age Sampled by Author.

Crime at Sea

"THE AFFAIR OF THE SCARLET CRAB," by Clifford Knight. (Dodd, Mead, $2.)

As the title suggests, this is a story of mystery and crime taking place during a scientific yachting expedition, against the unusual background of deserted Pacific waters. The goal of the trip is the Galapagos Islands, which lie beyond the Humboldt Current. It is there that these scientists expect to discover the rare specimens for their study. The objective in itself is mystifying since it deals with the strange study of sea life which is little known to the average reader and therefore adds to the weird and uneasy atmosphere.

As usual the murderer does not stop at one crime, with the last one becoming a tragic horror, all of which makes the absorbed reader feel that he might almost be the next victim. The characters are extremely well drawn and stand vividly before one with the aid of appropriate similes and concise and living phrases, rather than long drawn out descriptions.

"The Affair of the Scarlet Crab" provides easy and fast reading with the necessary touch of romance and is sure to hold one's attention to the end.

'Twilight of a World'

By Don K. Price.

THERE is nothing new in an attempt to combine fiction and political philosophy. The current flood of novels on the theme of the class war, and the abundance of political writings that are designed to read like fiction, are familiar to anyone who glances at current publishers' blurbs. For this reason the American reader may be puzzled to discover a connection between the prologue to "Twilight of a World" and the eight short stories and short novels that it contains.

The trouble is that the American reader is accustomed to painful attempts to cram ideology into literature. To him, political controversy is something to be conducted according to the rules of jurisprudential logic, and even the more exciting political and economic outbursts, such as the sit-down strike, are armchair subjects to be debated in accordance with the intellectual assumptions which the practical man considers universal.

Political questions have another meaning for Franz Werfel, who has seen the doctrine of nationalism shatter the empire which sheltered the idea and the way of life which he knew as a young man. The wreckage of the empire meant physical privation and moral disintegration for those whom he knew best. He is able, therefore, to write a series of stories which never appear to have political implications, but indirectly build up an atmosphere effectively, demonstrating his sympathies. The political sketch in his prologue and the several stories which follow have a real though subtle relationship.

• • • •

THOSE sympathies must be described if any clear idea is to be given of the theme of the book, because they alone link the eight separate works of fiction which it includes. He states them briefly enough. "Empires have been, and will be, founded only in the sign of a high idea." The Austrian Empire, like the United States, was founded on an idea rather than on racial community. On the other hand, there is the type of nationalism that has wrecked the imperial idea in Europe, beginning with the days when the French struggle for their revolutionary ideals confused the two concepts of liberalism and nationalism. "From humanity, through nationality, to bestiality"—this aphorism sums up Werfel's opinion of the political ideas which are now dominating Central Europe.

This clear contrast between the old imperial tradition and the way of life in modern Europe is reflected in all these stories. An example is the brief tale of the daughter of a former imperial minister. The tale begins as she starts up a hotel staircase, exultant in the knowldge that she is about to be free from a former lover to marry a respectable suitor, rapidly becoming a business success in America. It ends when, desolate in the knowledge that the new life would be a mockery to her, she reaches the top of the stairs and throws herself over.

ANOTHER example is the longer story of the bawdy house, where the manners and the glamour of the empire had mitigated even the perfumes peculiar to the establishment. Its life "deserved a more romantic ending than to terminate with the death of a decadent, half-witted last survivor. But do the great kingdoms of the earth perish more grandly? They think to survive, they carry on wars, and before they know it they are dissolved and divided up as booty."

The book, however, is no mere expression of nostalgia. For nostalgia implies a desire to return to what is past. And "Twilight of a World" is pervaded by the realization that nothing dies whose time has not come," whether it be the house of joy or the Austrian Empire. Austria failed because it had long been untrue to its central idea; it fought for Germanic hegemony when it should have maintained its traditional internationalism, its distrust of the theory that "the production of the means of existence and their unjust division were the divinely appointed aims of life." Austria, in short, was politically decadent, and Werfel's morbidity reflects that decadence in powerful though somewhat turgid prose.

One might almost suspect a didactic motive in the compilation of these stories for American publication, when most of which had been published in separate volumes in German. It is so clearly inferred that Europe betrayed her traditions of civilization because the Austrian Empire betrayed her basic idea. And it is so suggestively hinted that the United States is an empire, founded on the idea of "the highest personal freedom within a highly responsible community." It is the author telling us that on this American idea rests the preservation of civilized values?

HERR WERFEL would not be quite so obvious. He would feel about America, we may guess, as he wrote of certain of his characters—"the chosen few . . . affected by the changing times only to the extent that these were inevitably the subject of earnest conversation . . . so secured against rising tides as to know about them only by hearsay." America has happily been free from the political and physical misery that has afflicted Europe, and in particular those areas once comprised by the empire. And Herr Werfel, being an artist, boasts "the abysmal knowledge that the sufferer is worth more than the happy man."

Franz Werfel is essentially a scholar and philosopher. In his youth, he received the best educational, cultural and social advantages that money could buy. His twentieth year was spent in study at Hamburg and it was here that he wrote his volume of poems, "Der Weltfreund." This book, together with "Wir Sind" and "Einander," expresses the idea of the community of souls and present Werfel's concept of tragedy as the basis of life. His years on the Russian front during the World War only served to strengthen this belief. The spectacle of the carnage of battle, as well as subsequent political troubles, drove him into studious retirement in Vienna. Here he sought to teach men to love one another and to overcome the obstacles to brotherhood erected by tradition.

Herr Werfel was introduced to the American public in 1925 with a biographical novel based on the opera "Verdi." With several outstanding novels to his credit, three or four plays, and numerous outstanding essays, in his own country he is still know first as a poet.

Emperor of the Romans, Etc.

Gertrude Slaughter Paints Interesting Picture Of Palermo's Twelfth Century Infant Ruler.

"THE AMAZING FREDERIC," by Gertrude Slaughter. (Macmillan, $3.75.)

A very amazing Frederic, indeed, was this "Emperor of the Romans, King of Sicily and Apulia, and King of Jerusalem," as revealed in Gertrude Slaughter's colorful biography. Crowned king at Palermo in 1198 when he was only a blue-eyed, red-headed baby of less than 4 years, his destiny was to be the entering wedge that some hundred years after his death split asunder the temporal power of the state from the spiritual power of the then all-governing Papacy.

The baby king came into a troubled heritage. He was the grandson of the great Frederick Barbarossa and of the Norman king, Roger II of Sicily; his father was the German Henry VI and his unhappy Sicilian mother was later immortalized by Dante as the "Great Constance." Soon after the coronation, she died, leaving the small Frederic as the ward of Pope Innocent III. This wardship took strange forms. The Pope, who declared that he spent many sleepless nights planning the future of the youngster, nevertheless tossed him back and forth among the warring factions of the country over which he was still too young to reign. Time, however, remedied that situation, and when Frederic was 12 (children of the ruling houses must have been amazingly precocious in those times) he began to take state matters into his own hands. But the church's interference with his affairs was to continue throughout the reign of three Popes and until the day of Frederic's death, despite the many attempts to patch up the essential differences between the representatives of civil and ecclesiastical powers.

During the 12 years of the stormy regency, Frederic had been gaining knowledge in his own amazing fashion. His eager mind had been feeding from the stores of learning released by the first Renaissance of the twelfth century; also from contact with the sailors, scholars and adventurers on the many ships in Palermo harbor—with whom he fraternized in the democracy of learning. A natural sportsman, he trained his healthy body simultaneously with his active mind. And he had need of both for the turbulent yet brilliant life ahead that was to make him "Lord of the Whole Earth" as Emperors of the Holy Roman Empire modestly called themselves, besides a great lawgiver, a great builder, a Crusader, a writer and scientist in his own right, a patron of all the arts, the founder of the University of Naples.

Yet these little accomplishments, his biographer makes clear, were mere by-products to his real career; of welding together the warring and petty communes of his empire under his royal control; marrying four wives (which many a man would consider a career sufficient until itself), guarding and guiding the educations of his legitimate (and illegitimate) children; writing and illustrating his own book on falconry; suffering excommunication by the Pope at a time when this ban carried gravest social, political and religious consequences; and a never-ending struggle to wrest the powers of civil government from ecclesiastical authority.

Miss Slaughter carries her narrative of the baby king clear through a gallant, dramatic fifty-six years to his tragic fall, for when Frederic died, the empire he had built fell with him. She tells the story in a clear and intensely interesting style. She makes this little known emperor a very vivid and very real person who emerges from the forgotten shadows and dusty book pages of medieval history as a human being with a sense of humor, and the tragic destiny of the idealist who is ahead of his time. She shows that the amazing Frederic paid a bitter price for being a link between modern and medieval times; but that his contributions toward literary and scientific enlightenment, and his far-seeing ideals of a centralized state withdrawn from the temporal power of the church, made the price worth the paying.

The book shows the results of an immense amount of careful research and a broad historical background. It is illustrated with pen-and-ink sketches by Robert Hill Taylor.

"The Amazing Frederic" is well worth the reading.

Improved Care Of Mothers and Children Asked

Recommendations Made by Welfare Advisory Committee.

Mothers and babies will have better care in the future if the General Advisory Committee on Maternal and Child Welfare Service, appointed to assist the Federal Children's Bureau, has its way.

The committee, which functions under the social security act, announces indorsement of recommendations for increased and improved maternity care and care of newly born infants, and of a program of training in these fields for physicians and nurses. This announcement is the result of a week of discussion and consideration of reports and recommendations submitted by the advisory sub-committee on maternal welfare, and by the advisory committee on maternal and child health. The action of the General Advisory Committee was made public by its chairman, Dr. enneth D. Blackfan, professor of pediatrics of the Harvard University Medical School. In calling attention to its recommendations, Dr. Blackfan emphasized the fact that the extension of the maternity care program through Federal aid would apply especially to areas or groups from which resources for actual maternal care and expert obstetric and pediatric consultation service are not available. He also pointed out that it would include care given locally by general practitioners and nurses, and that in the development of such an extended program the right of the patient to select her own physician should be preserved.

The recommendations are as follows:

1. Extension of the maternal and child health work begun in 1935 through Federal co-operation with the States under the social security act appears to be urgently needed. This requires appropriation of public funds for maternal care, both medical and nursing, for all women in need of such care.

2. It is the opinion of this committee that a center or centers of postgraduate education should be established to teach urban or rural practitioners of medicine and nurses the fundamental principles of complete maternal and infant care.

3. The committee recognizes the necessity and desirability of co-operation with the national, State and local medical societies in the working out of any plan.

The report and recommendations were submitted by the advisory committee to the chief of the Children's Bureau in order that the bureau may take the necessary steps for the accomplishment of the purposes in view.

Every State in the Union, as well as Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia are now receiving Federal grants, under the social security act, to aid in development of maternal and child health services under State plans approved by the Children's Bureau.

On the Air Today

New programs on your dials tonight bring three widely known American personalities to radio audiences in weekly appearances.

Babe Ruth, baseball's "sultan of swat," begins a series of baseball "dope" programs to be heard twice weekly, WJSV, Wednesdays and Fridays, at 10:30 p. m. Listeners will receive the opportunity to match wits with Ruth in forecasting each week's winners of the 16 major league games in a contest. Ruth will use his time principally to review important games and interview players.

Helen Menken, Broadway stage favorite, is starred in a new dramatic serial, "Her Second Husband," to be heard weekly from WMAL at 8:30 p. m. The role will be that of Brenda Williams, a widowed mother of two children, trying desperately to make a success of a tiny dress shop. She meets Grant Cummings, a wealthy young man from New York who falls in love with her, a problem greater than the success or failure of the shop confronting her.

Miss Menken will be remembered notably for her role of the waif, Diane, in "Seventh Heaven," although her career on the stage, which began at the age of 5, has been highlighted by such characterizations as Queen Elizabeth in "Mary of Scotland" and Charlotte Lovell in the Pulitzer prize winner, "The Old Maid."

The new serial is apparently being based on the general formula of Helen Hayes' successful air serials.

Third in the parade of new features is the premiere of Lily Pons in the program vacated by Nino Martini, WJSV, at 9. The combination of Miss Pons and Maestro Kostelanetz is already a familiar one to radio and motion-picture audiences. The program for tonight offers Miss Pons singing "The Blue Danube," "Seal It With a Kiss," "Bird Song" by La Forge, and "Hymn to the Sun," by Rimsky-Korsakoff. The orchestra, at times with the chorus, will be heard in "Too Marvelous for Words," "Say Si Si," "Good Night Ladies" and "El Caminito."

Here and There: In the history of broadcasting few instances are recorded of a speaker being given one and one-half hours of time for an uninterrupted talk. Such is the record being established tonight by Max D. Steuer at WOL—and without the use of notes, either . . . Benny Goodman is reported to have been offered $11,000 weekly for an engagement at the Texas Centennial—a new high for a band. And present contracts make it impossible for him to accept the offer! . . . Fred Allen is reported as again having said he would vacation from radio for two years. J. H. H.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Bride in Forced Marriage Gives Allegiance to Husband Rather Than to Mother Who Supports Her; Family Friend Asks What to Do.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Please give your opinion of the following: A young man past 22 years of age, whose father is wealthy and holds an important public position, had an illicit affair with a girl under age. When the girl's mother learned of her condition she almost went mad with grief. In fact, she told me afterward it was a miracle that she did not lose her mind. The poor woman was frantic.

* * * *

But after considering the problem from every angle she decided the boy's people were very nice and would feel as badly as she, so she brought the two young persons together and told the boy he must tell his parents the circumstances and marry the girl so as to give the baby his name. The mother knew she could have the boy punished for his terrible act, but smothered her feelings out of consideration for the prominence of his family and kept quiet, paying the girl's doctor bills, medicine, etc.

* * * *

Instead of his family appreciating her attitude, they snubbed and ignored the mother, even to the point of laughing at the idea of meeting her. The boy married the girl and said he did not tell his parents of her condition, which I do not believe. Later, though, when something happened which worried the girl's mother, she took it upon herself to call the boy's mother and ask her if she knew existing conditions. The latter denied all knowledge of the matter, and while admitting that she knew her son was married to the girl, said they intended to ignore the matter.

* * * *

Late the same day the boy's father telephoned and after apologizing for his son's conduct offered to give the girl $25 a month out of the boy's monthly allowance of $200. The girl had been working and earning around $75 a month, and had had to give up her job because of her condition, a fact known to the boy's family. The girl's mother construed the offer as an effort to insult and embarrass her, so of course, she rejected it, saying her children had never wanted for anything and that her daughter could do without the $25 a month. (The girl's family, by the way, are fine, upright people on both sides, and on the mother's side the girl is descended from nobility).

* * * *

The mother told me the boy's father talked to her as though he were speaking to a servant in offering the monthly allowance. On another occasion, the boy's sister introduced his wife by her maiden name—another example of meanness. Several months after they were married, the boy transmitted a venereal disease to his child-wife, which he had acquired after marriage—another sign that he has no character. Of course, he had to tell his father in order to get money to be cured, whereupon the father called the girl's mother and said he would like to meet her personally and talk over matters with her. This was the first time any offer was made to meet the girl's family.

* * * *

Although the mother was upset and did not care to meet them, still she thought she was as good as they were and had certainly displayed more character and common sense. They have not paid any of the bills as yet and the girl is still living with her family. The boy comes to Washington every now and then and demands to see his wife and when he does see her he keeps her out all night and ignores the mother's wishes. He even criticized the mother for taking his wife back and forth on a street car, but he has not offered any other transportation. The girl will not listen to her mother's advice. She thinks her husband loves her, because he said so. I would like to advise this girl's mother and will be waiting for your opinion. PUZZLED.

Don't Indulge Weaklings.

DEAR PUZZLED: It is impossible to form any definite opinions in this case, for the reason that the picture is not clearly drawn. For instance; it isn't clear whether the child has yet been born. It isn't clear why the girl continues to live with her family. One doesn't understand whether her husband is a student or a playboy, or just what explanation he offers for not making a home for her and his child or his expected child, as the case may be).

* * * *

However, since he has married the girl, thus acknowledging to the world his responsibility for her "condition," so called, since he has attained to his legal majority and is financially in a position to support a wife and child (as what man couldn't on an income of $200 a month?) it seems to me he should be required to do just that. One can appreciate the mother's rather stiff-necked pride, considering his family's callous attitude toward the situation, but I wonder if it is wise? After all, she is placing herself in a position of bearing the brunt of the whole situation, with very little co-operation from her daughter, it seems to me. The least the latter might do, if her husband fails to bring her to the forefront in his life, is refuse to have any under cover association with him. She has no moral right to lean on her mother for support, while permitting her snobbish husband to exploit her as a plaything.

* * * *

Of course, it is possible the boy is a well-intentioned weakling whose family is more to blame than he for the lack of manliness he has displayed toward his wife. He may even care for her in his own limited, selfish fashion, but it may be that his parents are determined to break up the match at whatever cost to the girl and to him. His mother's disdainful, holier-than-thou attitude and his father's contemptuous gesture toward his purse strings (and not a very generous gesture at that), do not suggest that either is endowed with any appreciable amount of nobility.

* * * *

It would seem to me that if the girl refuses to listen to her mother's advice she should not be granted the latter's too-indulgent and sacrificial protection. Perhaps if she were thrown entirely on the mercy of her husband and his family, she would speedily come to her senses and realize the vulnerability of her position. If the boy's family, and the boy himself, had consistently refused to admit the possibility of their having any connection with the girl's plight, her mother might be considered to be doing a fine and praiseworthy thing in standing by her throughout the crisis. But it would appear, from your story, that she is encouraging both in vicious indulgence in permitting them to consort together at her expense.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Neck Lingerie Touch Discussion Unsettled

Hollywood—The discussion of to put or not to put a lingerie touch at the neck is still unsettled. Although Orry-Kelly, designer, definitely taboos it, Herschel thinks it's all right and uses it in a spring suit for Claire Trevor. The suit is of nubby gray wool made with a single-breasted cutaway jacket which has a wide, square neckline. Herschel adds a gilet of white corded silk which has the appearance of a blouse and suggests that a half-dozen different gilets would make the suit practical as well as interesting.

Sheer Dark Dress Smartly and Simply Styled Should Be Foundation for Summer Wardrobe

May Be Accented With Lingerie Touches or Jewelry.

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

A DARK SHEER can be selected with assurance as the backbone of the spring and summer wardrobe. The newest interpretations are planned for comfort as well as style, and the majority of materials have a slight ribbing which gives them more body than the sheers of other seasons. This extra body without extra weight promotes better hanging qualities and is inducive to more satisfactory cleaning—they stay pressed longer.

Sheers and triple sheers are as comfortable in midsummer as they are in spring. This is particularly true when the frock is equipped with either a short jacket or a cape. It may be worn with the miniature wrap for spring and cool summer evenings, or alone for summer daytime wear. A good-looking sheer, smart, yet simple in styling, is the ideal selection for the business woman; a costume she can don in the morning and feel well dressed throughout the day, regardless of the unexpected social or business engagements.

Black Leading Color.

Black is in the lead at present and, according to authorities, will continue to hold first place in the color chart throughout the summer. Navy blue and deep wine tones rank next, and there is a prediction that dark brown will be much in evidence as the spring season advances. The majority of dark sheers have a bit of white for striking color contrast; pastel tints are also being sponsored as a summer touch for dark sheer costumes.

Besides the sheers, which have taken over the current style scene, chiffons, marquisette and net, are appearing in the dark tones mentioned; also, dotted swiss, linen, organdy and shantung, for informal midsummer wear. The main consideration, when buying a dark sheer, chiffon and the like, is to choose good material and a style which will adapt itself to numerous accessory changes; a neat and adaptible neckline, comfortable short sleeves, and a practical jacket or cape topping.

May Change Accents.

A basic frock with good lines may be transformed daily by different types of accents—jewelry in white or pastel tints for summer; lingerie touches; flowers at the throat (not the shoulder); belts of different hues and styling; bandings or pipings of pique, grosgrain. Hats, gloves and shoes also help to give the illusion of a more extensive wardrobe, and with colored gloves so important in the spring and summer fashion scene, the possibilities for transforming a dark sheer this season are unlimited.

THIS smart black sheer jacket-frock would see you through spring and summer with fashion assurance and comfort. It is a costume you can do things with. The simple neckline lends itself to numerous accessory changes; likewise other belts could be substituted for the plastic version of daisies. Note the slide fasteners on jacket sleeves; chic, as well as providing a variety of sleeve lengths.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, April 13.

IT'S ALWAYS a pleasure to meet up with a feminine fugitive from the Hollywood chain-gang, especially when she's as peppy and interesting as my old pal, Thyra Samter Winslow, one of the best short-story writer alive and lately knocking out scripts for one of the great film canneries.

ALICE HUGHES.

Thyra, unfortunately, had to come East to see a man about a divorce, but she is still the same vivid and colorful girl who came bounding out of her native Fort Smith, Ark., joined a musical show chorus and wrote a novel called "Show Business" about the experience. She wrote dozens of brilliant short stories for the old Smart Set in the days of its Mencken-and-Nathan glory. It's fun to be where Thyra is, for there is always something going on in her immediate vicinity.

Right now Thyra is sitting in a suite in her hotel watching Central Park trying to get seasonably green. And her report on the filmy colony is that the place is New York's largest suburb. You're far more apt to find your writing or acting pal in the Brown Derby or at some Glamour Girl's evening shindig than you are in her accustomed Eastern haunts. Hollywood has stolen the actors, the playwrights, the radio canneries and even the eye-filling mannequins. You'd think that New York was limping along on one cylinder—and from the standpoint of show business, it really is. Thyra herself goes back to the Gold Coast galley bench early next month.

This Hollywood migration has strange facets. Let me, for instance, fail to check in at such eating houses as Sardi's or the Algonquin for two months, and the next time I turn up I'm greeted with, "Why — haven't seen you in ages! I heard you'd gone to the Coast." Which, to the 1937 Broadwayite, is heaven.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—This being the 13th of the month, according to my calendar, I remember that it is Lily Pons' birthday—a fact which makes the Met mite partial to all things numbered 13. The cunning little Frenchy has had a fine year of it. She had new triumphs at the opera, made a most amusing movie, continued her pleasing labors on the air, received the keys of the thriving city of Norwalk, Conn., near which she has her beloved summer home, and opened a grand duplex apartment on East Fifty-seventh street, which she warmed with a huge party. Everybody likes Pons. Ask the stage hands at the Metropolitan—that's the acid test of a trouper! Now she tells me that her next film is to be a remake of dear old "Kiki," made famous by Lenore Ulric . . . .

New York's sidewalks are filled with ladies and gentlemen carrying signs. They may advertise a cheap beauty parlor or they may announce that the bearer, an American citizen, spent ten months in a German prison, and is very mad about it. But I met my favorite the other day. A young man was wearing a "sandwich" which read, in part, "Stalked by Stork. I want work now! Eight years' experience in advertising and sales promotion. Age 28; 5 feet 7 inches; 135 pounds; $20." The ambitious and gallant man carried his sign along and so out of my life, but I certainly hope he got a job, don't you? That "Stalked by Stork" is a punch line if ever there was one! . . .

A big local store is advertising "Career Girl" fashions, and a cute title. However, if you are only a cake-baker in the home, I'm sure they'll accommodate you . . . We people who hang around the Grand Central Deppo waiting for the 8:19 from Boston are more than usually excited these days. That amazing railroad station, on May 3, will open the gates of its own newsreel theater, to seat 244 and with shows running an hour. It's opposite Track 17. Now one can literally live in and about Grand Central, movies and all!

I suppose it was bound to happen, and it has One of our more alert stores, which watches the Page 1 headlines like the proverbial hawk, has crashed forth with a "sit-down dress," which features a double skirt. I wish these wide-awake merchants all the luck, but hope we can forget that term soon!

Post Recipe Contest Winners

THE RAISIN is a versatile food. Judging by the recipes entered in The Post Raisin Recipe Contest last week, they may be used in every course of a dinner, or any other meal, from "soup to nuts."

Mrs. J. H. King, 1623 Thirty-fifth street northwest, was the winner of the first prize, $3, for her recipe for raisin surprise loaf.

The second prize, $2, was won by Mrs. H. W. Bricker, 407 Fourth street, Shenandoah, Va., for her recipe for California stuffed ham; the third prize, $1, went to Mrs. William W. Keech, Charlotte Hall, Md., for her recipe for raisin and sweet potato biscuits, and the fourth prize, $1, went to Miss Louise H. Pinkney, care of R. Nelson, Route No. 6, Bethesda, Md., for her recipe for frozen fruit cake. The fifth prize, also $1, was awarded to Mrs. Dorothy Manders, 1721 S street southeast, Washington, for her recipe for raisin cheese tarts.

Here is Mrs. King's recipe:

Raisin Surprise Loaf.

1 cup seedless raisins
1 cup flaked canned salmon
1 cup shredded raw carrots
½ cup sliced celery
¼ cup pickle relish
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon salt
Drop of tabasco sauce
¾ teaspoon gelatin
2 tablespoons cold water
1 cup cottage cheese
½ cup salad dressing
Small sandwich loaf bread
1 package cream cheese

Wash raisins in hot water; drain. Combine with salmon, carrots, celery, relish, lemon juice and seasonings. Soften gelatin in cold water; melt over hot water. Add to cottage cheese which has been blended with salad dressing. Mix thoroughly with first mixture. Remove crust from bread. Cut ¼-inch slice off top of loaf and cut out the center, leaving walls about ¼ inch thick. Fill with mixture. Replace top, fastening it with toothpicks. Chill loaf thoroughly; ice with cream cheese which has been mixed with a little milk until soft enough to spread. Slice and serve with an assortment of relishes. Serves eight.

Mrs. Bricker's recipe:

California Stuffed Ham.

3 cups bread crumbs
¼ cup raisins
¼ teaspoon salt
Few grains pepper
½ teaspoon poultry seasoning
1 onion, chopped
3 tablespoons fat
¼ cup boiling water
2 slices ham, cut 1 inch thick

Mix crumbs, raisins and seasoning. Fry onion in fat and add to bread mixture. Add water, mix well. Spread between slices ham tie firmly with string. Put in covered baking dish, add a little water, bake in slow oven (325 F.) for one hour. Serve with raisin sauce.

Raisin Sauce.

Mix ¼ cup brown sugar and 1 tablespoon flour. Add ¾ cup water, bring to boiling point. Add ¼ teaspoon salt, ¼ cup orange juice, 3 tablespoons lemon juice and ½ cup raisins.

Boil slowly five minutes and add 1 tablespoon butter. Serve hot over ham.

Mrs. Keech's recipe follows:

Raisin and Sweet Potato Biscuits.

¾ cup seeded raisins
¾ cup mashed potatoes
¼ cup flour (before sifted)
2-3 cup sweet milk
4 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon sugar
3 teaspoons double-action baking powder
1 teaspoon salt

Mix mashed potatoes, milk, butter thoroughly, then add other ingredients. Roll and cut in any desired size. Bake in a quick oven.

Miss Pinkney's recipe:

Frozen Fruit Cake.

2 cups milk
½ cup sugar
¼ cup flour
¼ teaspoon salt
2 eggs
1 cup white seedless raisins
1 cup broken pecans or mixed nuts
2 cups crumbled macaroons
½ cup chopped candied cherries
1 cup cream, whipped

Scald milk. Blend sugar, flour, salt; add to milk, stir until smooth. Cook ten minutes, pour over beaten eggs; cook until thick, stirring constantly. Cool. Add other ingredients, folding in the whipped cream last. Freeze in the refrigerator. This serves about six people.

Here is Mrs. Manders' recipe:

Raisin Cheese Tarts.

1 cup raisins
1-3 cup sugar
½ cup thin cream
½ cup cheese, grated
1 tablespoon melted butter
2 eggs
Juice of one lemon

Add sugar to cheese and mix until smooth, then add beaten eggs and remaining ingredients. Pour into pastry pans and bake in a hot oven about 15 minutes, reducing heat after 5 minutes. When cool, sprinkle top with powdered sugar.

Honorable mention was received by Mrs. Bettie Greer, Alexandria, Va.; Mrs. Mildred Alexandria, Hollywood, Calif.; Miss A. S. Adams, 2505 Thirteenth street northwest; Miss Lillie H. Dickerson, 3204 Seventeenth street northwest, and Mrs. Mary E. Doyle.

Paris Sports Fans Wear Jewel Tints

Paris, April 13 (AP).—Jewel-tinted sports clothes make tempting bits of color at Paris race tracks.

Turquoise suits, topaz jackets, frocks in lapis blue and coats in carnelian red step around from post to paddock.

Fur swaggers come to the rescue when rough winds blow.

Hats match suits and frocks. Felt hats with brims drooped low or rolled up Breton style and crowns banded with grosgrain ribbon take the lead in sportswear.

Gloves, shoes and bags—the leather trio—go off on color tangents of their own, turning out in wine red or chestnut brown for ensembles in gray, green or navy.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

After having stated in the article yesterday that the record for human weight was 739 pounds, I find this morning a newspaper clipping which records the death of "Happy Jack Eckert, who weighed 739 pounds and who lived to be 68 years old, and died of injuries when his specially built motor car collided with a freight truck near Flomaton, Ala.

This controverts the usual idea that all fat people die young.

The thinnest adult of average height and development that I find recorded is that of Calvin Edson, who was 5 feet 4 inches tall and weighed 60 pounds. In 1813 he served in the American Army at the Battle of Plattsburg. At that time he weighed 125 pounds and was 25 years old. He lay all night on the cold ground and became numb, and immediately began to lose weight.

More extreme examples of thinness have occurred, but always in association with deformity. These are cases in which there is a disease of the muscles all over the body, causing atrophy, and the muscles become so weak that they are useless. Some living skeletons have a certain amount of muscular atrophy. Probably the onset of muscular atrophy from changes in the central nervous system is what happened to Calvin Edson when he lay on the cold ground all night.

The other less conspicuous examples of abnormal leanness are active and able to do good work. They are always trying, however, to gain weight, and my mail contains many appeals from them.

Nutritional experts say these men and women simply do not like to eat, and that their leanness is due to diminished intake of nutrition. That if they will deliberately force themselves to eat extra nourishing food, they can gain weight.

A diet somewhat as follows persisted in for two or three months is guaranteed by all nutritional experts to add weight:

Breakfast: Orange juice or other fruit; double omelette; two slices of whole wheat toast; oatmeal or farina with cream; glass or two of whole milk. Or shredded wheat with prunes and cream, poached egg on whole wheat toast, two glasses milk.

Lunch: Cream soup; fruit salad with dressing; whole wheat bread with cream cheese; pudding with whipped cream; milk and coffee. Or whole wheat macaroni and cheese, salad of asparagus, beets and hard-boiled egg on lettuce, gingerbread with whipped cream, two glasses milk.

Dinner: Oyster stew; steak or other meat with fat; creamed potatoes; carrots in butter sauce; custard, coffee and milk. Or baked chicken, vegetables, whole wheat bread and butter, banana cream pudding, two glasses milk.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Seven pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper. The pamphlets are: "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet." "Indigestion and Constipation." "Reducing and Gaining." "Infant Feeding." "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes." "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Queen's Coronation Dress Is Described

Hollywood—The designs in gold that will deck the queen's coronation dress of ivory satin are: thistles, roses, oak leaves, acorns, maple leaves, leek lotus, wattles, fern and protea. Even this long in advance of the coronation we see many prints and gadgets featuring these designs.

Marion Marsh wears an enameled thistle brooch at the throat of a white linen suit blouse. Veda Ann Borg wears a gilded maple leaf in the lapel of her beige wool suit and the combination is as effective as any spring has produced. Acorns and oak leaves are a novel print on a creamy background mrepe which June Martel wears on an informal afternoon. Helen Valkis has a life-like long green fern encircling her sporty white felt, while the same motif is repeated in tiny green embroidered ferns on the patch pockets of a white crepe dress.

THE MERRY WHIRL

By Marylyn.

The Dayton Hedges have certainly done their share to liven up the social life here, during their stay in our fair city. An attractive couple, they are full of fun and life is far from dull when they are about. He is a cousin of the Thomas Burkes.

Seventeen years ago after growing up on Long Island, playing football and all of the other sports college had to offer, Dayton went to Cuba to make his home. His "place" just outside of Havana—known as Hoyo Colorado, is really a young town. Taking over an old ranch Mr. Hedges, who is interested in mills, not only made plans, but carried them out. No wonder he is the best liked and known American in the islands and also no wonder, he was selected and "invited" by Cuba to come here to represent it at the Textile Conference!

The gentleman of the eternal grin, as he is known by his friends, with his charming wife gave a delightful dinner party the other evening at the Mayflower. Among those who enjoyed their hospitality were the Cuban Ambassador, Senor Dr. Pedro Martinez Fraga; Dr. and Senora de Valdes Rodriguez, Dr. and Senora Baron, Dr. and Senora Albertini, Dr. and Senora Alejandro Camas, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Wilson, who are practically on their way to Geneva and the Tom Burkes.

The Hedges are leaving today or tomorrow for a brief spin about New York City and then will head Southward to their beloved Cuba.

Frances Parkinson Keyes certainly looked springy in her new outfit at luncheon the other day. The costume was dark blue, topped off with a tailored sailor of straw. On the front of the hat and on one lapel were wee corsages of the gayest spring posies. Very pretty and so effective!

* * * *

Caught just the fleetingest glimpse of Jack O'Brien when he slid his car up to the curb, leaped out, and across the sidewalk to a shop, and, believe it or not, before we had passed by, he was out again and driving down the street. That is high speed for you.

Frida Frazer, who has been sadly missed in these parts for the past many months, has returned with her family—the Randolph Leighs. After tripping all over the Continent, with stops in Paris, Rome, Budapest, Berlin and any other place you can name, they are once again in their lovely home out in Virginia. And just in time, too, to get their courts and swimming pool all ready for the coming summer.

Col. Carl Schiffeler had two very smartly dressed ladies having luncheon with him yesterday in the Pall Mall room of the Raleigh. One, of course, was slim Mrs. Schiffeler, who had on a very good-looking tailor suit of smokey brown tweed, to which she added the artistic touch of a vivid green straw sailor. Mrs. Ernest Van Fossan's frock was of black sheer crepe, embroidered all over with a tiny, well-spaced floral design. Over this she wore a dark gray coat trimmed about the neck and in tunic fashion with gray fox. Her hat was a becoming model of smooth black straw.

Selection is made upon scholarship, leadership, and a definitely planned purpose in graduate study. It is designated customarily to the fields of science, art and human relations.

A nonfraternity winner of 1936, working for a degree in medicine, is Dorothy Horstman, student at the University of California, Berkeley, from which she was a graduate last year.

The two other 1936 fellows are Ruth Stauffer, student at Radcliffe College, Cambridge, Mass., and Agnes Darrow, attending Columbia University, New York City. Both are working toward Ph. D. degrees in English.

Fellowship winners will be announced shortly after July 1.

Application blanks should be obtained at once from the office of the dean of women at either George Washington University or the University of Maryland. They should be mailed before March 25 to Mrs. Robert George, Box 957, Minot, N. Dak.

The D. A. R. is working to place Shellfield as one of the shrines of Virginia and will place a marker there in May. Shellfield is in Westmoreland County and was originally known as Gahagans, then Ball's Lower Plantation. For 100 years it was the home of "near kin" of George Washington, who often visited there in his boyhood. It was the home of William Ball, first cousin of Mary Ball Washington, mother of George Washington.

The guests of honor at the card party this afternoon will be Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, State regent; Mrs. Lee R. Pennington, State historian, and Mrs. Lily Stone, historian of Maryland.

Costumes and songs of many nations were features of the entertainment given by the foreign students of the Americanization School in honor of the D. A. R. yesterday afternoon. The festival was opened with a procession of foreign groups and new citizens. Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, State regent of the District of Columbia, made an address. Miss Maude E. Aiton, principal of the Americanization School, expressed the appreciation of the students and authorities of the school for the splendid work in behalf of the school accomplished over a period of years by the D. A. R. Mrs. W. W. Husband, who is important in Americanism work of the D. A. R. and women's circles, also made an address.

A group of Scotch lads and lassies in costumes danced a sword dance. Spritely French songs were sung by French students. Russian and Lithuanian students danced folk dances.

Harpist, Singer Appear In Benefit for Hospital

Committee of G. W. U. Institution's Women's Board Presents Concert at Sulgrave Club; Mr. and Mrs. Sibley Among Guests.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

A committee from the women's board of George Washington University Hospital yesterday afternoon presented Mme. It was given for the benefit of the hospital, with Mrs. E. Goring Bliss, Mrs. W. H. Collier and Mrs. Cabot Stevens in charge.

Mr. and Mrs. Harper Sibley were there, as were Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister, and Senorita Marguerite Montero, all sitting in the same row; Miss Pauletta Guffey, and her sister, Mrs. Carroll Miller, were just in front of them. The hat was close fitting and had two high, stiff ribbon ends pointing up at a gay angle in front. Miss Meyer wore a chiffon gown of thistle pink made with a full skirt and long full sleeves, and wore no hat.

After her final group numbers, Mme. d'Aulby sang a familiar Italian street song, distributing spring flowers from a basket as she moved through the audience. Mme. Pastoriza, Mr. H. C. Davis, of the hospital board; Mr. Stevens, Mrs. Smith and many other members of the audience were given flowers as she passed.

Mrs. Stevens spoke briefly during program intermissions and after the concert tea was served in the dining room. Bob Burns Says

Copyright, 1937

By Bob Burns.

The other night I went to see a spicy show and I happened to be sittin' right back of a father and his young daughter. I knew they were from out of town by their looks and I could tell from the way the father squirmed around in embarrassment after the show got under way that he hadn't known what kind ow a show it was.

Finally he turned to his daughter and he says "I'm sorry I brought you to this show and I don't think it's the kind of entertainment for a girl your age."

The daughter says, "Oh, don't worry, pop, don't git so restless—the show'll probably liven up toward the end!"

Hears A March

At far-away Lake Toba in Central Sumatra, Dr. William M. Mann, director of the National Zoological Park here, hears a familiar hometown strain, "The Washington Post March," and becomes a trifle nostalgic . . . Dr. Mann is on the glamorous quest of animals and his working moments are full of interest . . . But nostalgia must have been on him that night, March 9, when he tuned in a radio and caught on the air waves from Batavia the tune he knew back home . . .

A postal card relating all this was received here just yesterday . . . Said Dr. Mann: "Last night heard over radio from Batavia the "Washing Post March! . . . Rubber is up . . . Is there any other news in the world?"

D.C. Hospitals Facing Grave Emergency

9 Institutions Average Deficit of $10,000 Per Month.

'Health Crusade Week,' Opening April 26, to Feature Fund Drive.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

"Help hospitals, help health!"

This appeal has gone out to thousands of persons who did not contribute to the Community Chest, and to thousands of others who may respond anyway, once they realize that Washington today faces the most pressing hospital-health emergency in its history.

What, exactly, is the situation? What can be done about it?

The first question is answered in files at the Central Admitting Bureau for Hospitals where countless case histories tell the story of hospital aid and clinical care dispensed to persons who could not pay the regular rate, or frequently nothing, for such service.

These answers translate themselves into diagrams, graphs and figures pointing out that nine United Hospitals now are averaging a shortage of $10,000 a month; and that they cannot continue their services to the city's needy sick—unless loyal Washingtonians dig down in their purses and provide money to meet the need.

Abnormal Load Carried.

For two years these hospitals have carried an abnormal load. Care of thousands of needy persons has been unpaid for, even though payment for many more thousands has been taken care of by the Community Chest. In the first two months of this year, the expense of 3,560 days' care for patients certified by the Central Admitting Bureau and over 10,000 pre-natal, syphilis, and other clinic cases had to be shouldered entirely by the hospitals.

Through the years when the Community Chest could not provide enough funds to meet the required budget, these institutions have stood as a bulwark against the spread of disease, and as angels of mercy to persons poverty-stricken and ill. Meanwhile, debts have piled up and credit has been stretched to a distressing point. The situation now, simply stated, is this: Hospitals must have financial support to carry on, to make use of over $3,000,000 in physicians' services that are offered freely every year.

When the Community Chest drive was under way in October, 1935, the Medical Society urged the budget committee to allow at least the full sum of $350,000 for hospitals, "in view of the experience of the profession that the appropriations hitherto have been insufficient to make available to the needy public the contribution of the medical profession." If the Chest had achieved its goal, there would be no hospital-health emergency today.

As it was, the hospital-health appropriations, along with those for other types of welfare work, had to be curtailed. Instead of $350,000 needed, the sum set aside was $276,000. This meant that either many ill persons would have to be turned away from the door at the Central Admitting Bureau or that hospitals would have to continue to carry on against terrific odds.

Thus far Washington's sick have been cared for, despite mounting hospital deficits. Citizens of the Capital have continued to be given the benefit of physicians' services, clinical attention and hospital care in accordance with their individual ability, or inability, to pay for it.

Persons who have never yet been forced by circumstances to apply to the Central Admitting Bureau for help in time of illness may know little about how this agency functions. But Mary Brown knows. Mary Brown—we shall call her that for conveniences—can tell you all about it.

Supports three on $10.

She is a widow, and she supports herself, her aged mother and her 8-year-old daughter, Nancy, on a salary of $10 a week. She is a waitress. Eight months ago, Mrs. Brown moved to Washington. Six months ago, Nancy fell ill. The physician advised an immediate operation (Nancy had acute appendicitis). The mother had no money but her weekly salary, and no relatives who could afford to help her. When she told the physician this, he gave her a reference card to the Central Admitting Bureau for Hospitals, 901 Eighth street.

The result? Nancy went to Children's Hospital and received attention and care from a skilled surgeon who gave his services free. She stayed in the hospital two weeks at no expense to her mother, she is now at home, completely recovered. But the cost of services for Nancy, while taken care of in part by the Community Chest, helped to increase the deficit for Children's Hospital.

There are hundreds of Mary Browns in Washington today.

"crusade for health," an emergency appeal of, and for, united hospitals, already is under way. A committee composed of presidents of the institutions involved, presidents of the hospital ladies' boards and patrons and patronesses has set up headquarters at the Mayflower where, starting tomorrow, contributions will be received.

The crusade will shift into high gear on April 26 when "Health Crusade Week" starts. It will continue through national child health day on May 1 ("badge day") when every person who contributes, or has contributed, to the cause will wear the badge of a health crusader.

* * * *

(The work of each of the nine united hospitals will be pictured in detail, and the need for help explained in terms of actual community-case histories. Providence Hospital, the institution now burdened with the biggest deficit, will be discussed tomorrow.)

Lawyers Urge Small Claims Court for D. C.

Chapter of National Guild Backs Measure for Quick Handling.

The Washington Chapter of the National Lawyers Guild yesterday went on record favoring a small claims court for the District. Acting through its speical committee named by Guild President Thomas E. Emerson, the organization approved the Senate bill for creation of the court with minor changes.

The committee, headed by Lawrence Koenigsberber, chairman; David Sokol, Thomas C. Billig, former Judge James A. Cobb, and Melvin D. Hildreth, submitted a report embodying the following summary:

Ends "Technicalities."

"The legal technicalities and protracted and expensive delays in the courts are completely eliminated in the small claims court. A person who has a claim need but pay his filing fee of one dollar, if he has it, and without being forced to draw formal legal papers, he comes immediately into court aided by the counsel of the presiding judge. The hundreds and perhaps even thousands of persons who have been kept away from courts by reason of their fear of lawyers and the expense of litigation, will be able to get their legal rights without formal ceremony.

"Procedure in the small claims and conciliation branch will be informal. The judge has full discretionary power to waive all costs for those unable to pay. The services of the clerk will be available without charge to individual persons in the preparation of initial papers to commence action. It is provided that immediately prior to the trial of any case the judge shall make an earnest effort to settle the controversy by conciliation.

Aids Law Wage Group.

"The judge is given full discretionary power to stay the entry of judgment and to stay execution. The court will hold at least one night session each week. This will be of particular assistance to low income families that cannot afford to lose even a few hours' pay. It will involve no appointments of new judges or clerks. It will not be a new court, but a new branch for the present court. It will free four of the five judges to try the larger cases, without the possible irritation of the smaller cases."

Immigrants of Twelve Nations Give Spring Festival Program

District D. A. R. Honor Guests at Americanization School Affair at Washington Hotel; 32 New Citizens Take Oath to Flag.

Immigrant groups from 12 countries joined hands last night to present a colorful program at the fifteenth annual Americanization School Association Spring Festival in the Washington Hotel's Hall of Nations.

The local chapter of the D. A. R. was guest of honor at the three-hour spectacle, which was witnessed by nearly 1,000 persons.

Centered around 32 recently naturalized citizens who were administered an oath to the flag and welcomed to American citizenship by Mrs. William A. Becker, president general of the D. A. R., the program included musical, singing and cancing acts.

Native costumes added to the occasion and national instruments were used by the performers. The program opened with a Scotch bagpipe selection and sword dance, followed by songs, recitations and dances by delegations from France, Norway, Greece, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Ecuador, Mexico, Lithuiana, Poland and Russia.

In the absense of Col. Frederic A. Delano, president of the association, Walter W. Husband, former Assistant Secretary of Labor, introduced Henry Gilligan, recently retired member of the School Board, and Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, District D. A. R. regent, the principal speakers.

Miss Mary Aiton, head of the Americanization School, thanked the D. A. R. Members for their work in aiding aliens.

"Speaking for the D. A. R., I wish to extend my hand in a friendly gesture to you new citizens, and want you to know that any help that you may need in administering your new lives in this country will gladly be given by us," Mrs. Becker said, before administering the oath to the flag, which concluded the festival.

HighlandsBody Opposes Local Income Levies

Citizens Association Also Objects to Bill for Auto Weight Tax.

The Randle Highlands Citizens' Association last night adopted resolutions opposing the Collins bill for a local income tax, for a weight tax on automobiles and for an increased gasoline tax. However, it approved a bill for a graduated license tax on the operators of parking lots. It also approved bills to regulate real estate brokers, to regulate the practice of professional engineers and to set up a small claims court.

A special committee reported that the Pennsylvania avenue bridge is now considered so dangerous that the Capital Transit Co. no longer sends its heavy buses across it. A fire truck company, the committee further reported, has been ordered to make a detour rather than use the bridge. The association is insisting on funds for a new bridge, but the pending District appropriation bill provides only $40,000 for repairs.

A. F. Scheer, president of the Northeast Conference, spoke at the meeting. A. W. Lee presided. It was announced that the association now has 337 members, the largest in its history.

Brookland Citizens.

Officers of the Brookland Citizens Association were re-elected last night as the association met at the Masonic Temple at Twelfth and Monroe streets northeast. Those named were Marvin McLean, president; Dr. George R. Ellis, vice president, and W. M. Coffman, treasurer. McLean and Ellis were named as delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Four tax bills were given endorsement. They were the proposed inheritance tax, the increase of 1 cent per gallon in the gasoline tax, an increase from 4 to 5 per cent in the tax on gross receipts of public utilities, and a weight tax on commercial vehicles.

The association reiterated its request that the Brookland School be replaced with a new 16-room building and auditorium and asked that two streets be improved, Kearny from Tenth to Sixteenth, and Otis from Twelfth to Sixteenth.

Mrs. Condon Remains Absentee Vote Chief

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Democratic Women's National Council it was announced that Mrs. Arthur D. Condon, president of the council, has been asked by Chairman James A. Farley of the Democratic National Committee to continue in charge of absentee voting work.

Mrs. Condon announced she has named Mrs. Harry G. Schorr as chairman of the absentee voters bureau.

Safety Office May Control D. C. Traffic

Supt. Brown Studying Plan for Changing Division Name.

Proposal Indorsed for Effect on Drivers; Shifts Made.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

The name of the police traffic division may be changed to "Safety Division" within the next few weeks, it was learned last night.

Police Supt. Ernest W. Brown, it was reported, is considering the proposal.

Under the suggested setup, police traffic squads would become "safety squads" and lettering on traffic patrol cars would be changed to read "Safety Division, Metropolitan Police."

The plan received support from Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer. He said: "It is a splendid idea. Although it has my support, such an administrative change is entirely a matter for Maj. Brown and the Commissioners."

The psychological effect on motorists was cited by Van Duzer as an important factor in the proposed change. Traffic and traffic problems, he said, are constantly confronting District drivers.

Will Confer With Holmes.

Maj. Brown, it is understood, will discuss the proposal with Inspector William E. Holmes, newly appointed police traffic supervisors, before offering recommendations to the Commissioners.

Inspector Holmes indorsed the change, commenting:

"I think it will be a fine thing. We cannot stress safety too strongly. The traffic division is interested primarily in promoting safety and to change the name would be in direct line with our policy."

In one of the first shifts of personnel since Inspector Holmes took office, it was announced that Sergt. John J. Agnew, chief of the Traffic Collateral Bureau, will become an assistant to Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, police executive officer.

Lieut. Walter Beale, present assistant to Inspector Edwards, will be transferred to precinct duty.

The Central Traffic Collateral Bureau is to be abolished Thursday. Activities of this office will be established throughout the various police precincts.

In Police Court a jury acquitted Theodore G. Ecconomous, 22, truck driver, accused of negligent homicide in connection with the traffic death of Jerome C. Ellicott, 72, January 30.

The accused driver told the court yesterday he failed to see the aged man until he felt a "thump" on the side of his truck.

An amended bill to authorize the District Commissioners to require semiannual mechanical inspections of motor vehicles owned locally was introduced in the House by Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District Committee.

The amendment, drafted by the Commissioners, provides that revenue from the inspection fees shall be deposited in the District's general fund in the Treasury, rather than in a special tax fund.

The special fund was designated to be used for the construction of whatever buildings are necessary to carry out the intent of the act. The amendment provides, however, that the money may be carried in general appropriations from the general revenue.

This is in line with the recommendations of the House sub-committee on District appropriations that the receipts from motor vehicle owners, especially from the gasoline tax, be made to finance other municipal expenses other than highway maintenance.

The semiannual inspection bill passed the House in 1935, but was blocked in the Senate.

Drivers Lose Permits.

John W. Banks, 2268 Sixth street northwest, suspended; William T. Barwick, 764 Thirteenth street southeast, revoked; Harriett I. Bassi, 1436 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, revoked; Benny E. Brizzi, 610 fifth street northeast, suspended; Nicholas J. Carroll, 2525 Twelfth street northeast, revoked; Rose D. Colliflower, 8050, Parkside lane northwest, revoked.

James M. Connor, 2308 Ashmead place northwest, revoked; John L. Dade 3024 Porter street northwest, revoked; Max Pinkelstein, 1011 Rittenhouse street northwest, suspended; Kerby S. Fones, 626 Fifth street northeast, revoked; Charles E. Hill, 1334 V street northwest, revoked; Jack S. Leishear, 1900 P street northwest, revoked; George Mitchell, 53 L street northwest, revoked; Elbert C. Musselman, 1338 North Capitol street, revoked.

Colby President Addresses Alumni

Local chapter members of the alumni of Colby College gathered at a iformal supper Moday at the Willard Hotel to hear Franklin W. Johnson, Colby president, call on "all Colby men" to support the rebuilding program planned by the New England School.

Visualizing a new Colby College "that will be the pride of the entire State of Maine," Johnson told his listeners that their's was a job never before attempted by an American school. "It is the plan of the university to construct a new university, modern in every sense of the word, yet retaining and perpetuating all the creditable records and achievements of the school, made since its founding in 1818," he said.

Architectural drawings and pictures of preliminary construction were flashed on a screen as Johnson outlined plans calling for a campus decorated with hundreds of pine trees, an artificial lake, terraces and buildings of early New England Colonial architecture. The campus will lay three miles from the present site in Waterville, Me., on Mayflower Hill.

Johnson is on a tour of the Eastern seaboard, addressing Colby graduates in large cities.

Mrs. Walker Wills Her Art To Corcoran

Valuable Works by Noted Painters Included; Kin Get Estate.

Valuable paintings yesterday were offered as a noteworthy addition to the collection of Corcoran Art Gallery by the will of Mrs. Emma Griffin Walker, widow of Edward Chandler Walker, president of the Detroit Museum of Art from 1907 until 1910.

Her husband, one of the founders of the Detroit Museum, was the son of the late Hiram Walker, one of the founders of the great distillery at Walkerville, Ontario.

Mrs. Walker, in her will, directed that her collection of art works, which includes some masterpieces by Gainsborough, Revoir, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Monticello, Lansdeer, Constable, Monet and Romney, be bequeathed to the institution here.

Walker, as founder of the Detroit organization, was the donor of several paintings to the gallery here.

The institute will take any steps necessary to obtain the collection, W. R. Valentine, director, said last night.

Mrs. Walker, who died here April 2, lived at 1314 Sixteenth street northwest.

Must Be Kept Together.

She stipulated that should the gallery accept her offer, the collection should be kept together. It is to be known, she continued, as the "Edward Chandler Walker and Mary Walker Collection."

If any of the stipulations are not complied with, the collection is to go to the Detroit Institute of Arts.

The Detroit Institute must likewise carry out the directions given for the care of the works, or it also will forfeit the bequest. In that event the pictures are to revert to the estate to eventually go to Mary Brewster Cassels, a niece, whose address was not disclosed.

In addition, the niece is to receive at least 75 per cent of the entire estate.

A sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Griffith Brewster, wife of Gen. Andre W. Brewster, is to share four pictures with her husband, and another sister, Margaret Griffith Geraghty, of Chicago, is to have five pictures.

Summer Home to Nieces.

A summer home at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea, at New Brunswick, Canada, is to go to two nieces, Andree and Nancy Cassels, in joint ownership. They also get all its furnishings.

Mrs. Brewster is also to have $10,000 in cash and Gen. Brewster is to have $5,000 in cash. Margaret Griffin Geraghty, is given $10,000 and her daughter, Margaret G. Geraghty is also willed $10,000. A niece, Marie C. Fatin, of Buffalo, is to have $5,000.

The will directed that in no event should the specific cash bequests total more than 25 per cent of the personal property left by Mrs. Walker. The value of her personal property, which includes cash, stocks, bonds and other securities, is not known and will not be until a petition for the probate of her will is filed later.

Frank Crowe, who was described as being Mrs. Walker's butler for many years, is given the mortgage on a home he owns at Windsor, Canada, and Mary Brewster Cassels, a niece, is to have the rest of the estate, which, under the terms of the will will approximate 75 per cent of Mrs. Walker's assets.

List of Paintings.

The paintings mentioned in the will include:

Monticolli, "Testing of the Fates;" Joseph Stannard, "An English Fishing Village; "John Gainsborough," by Gainsborough; "Landscape," by Pissaro; "Marine," by George Moreland; "Household Duties," by Garl Melchers; "Edward C. Walker," by Melchers; "The Letter," by Melchers; "Court," by Baron Leys; "Landscape" (watercolor), by Fromenlin; "Dandscape," by Sisley; "Portrait of Child," Lenbach; "Dutch Gentlemen," by Van den Helst; "Young Woman," by J. Questions Hit Transit Line Asset Figure Inclusion of Glen Echo in Valuation Under Fire at Hearing.

Historical Cost Traced in Preliminary to Rate Boost Fight.

Valuation of its properties was questioned sharply yesterday as the Capital Transit Co. finished presentation of testimony before the Public Utilities Commission.

In examining J. E. Heberle, company vice president, Raymond B. Keech, vice chairman of the commission, intimated he might ask that the cost of Glen Echo Park, owned by the company, be not included in computing the company's rate base.

"Why should Glen Echo be included," he asked.

"Because it has produced large amounts of business for the company," Heberle replied.

Token Rate Involved.

The present hearings are being held to determine whether the company is justified in its demand for increased token prices. The present price is four for 30 cents. The company would raise it to three for 25 cents.

District law provides the company shall be allowed a "reasonable return" on its investment. The purpose of the present hearing is to determine the amount of that investment. At its end, a rate hearing will be held.

The rest of the day was spent in listening to Heberle outline the company's historical cost. By historical cost he meant, he said, the cost to the original company of property used and useful in street car and bus operations.

$37,527,953 Valuation.

Heberle valued the company's Maryland and District properties at $37,527,953.

Beginning with Fred A. Sager, its chief engineer, the Public Utilities Commission today starts presentation of its witnesses.

He will be followed by B. M. Bachman, chief accountant, who will give figures on historical cost; Harry Scantlin, on land values, and Guy M. Carlin, on working capital.

Next week will be devoted to cross-examination by the Commission by the Capital Transit Co.

28 Saved Off Ship.

Basil Rathbone Raves, Ann Harding Sympathetic In New British Film, 'Love From a Stranger'

Suspense Furnishes the Chief Quality of Appeal in Trafalgar Production, Released in This Country Through United Artists; the Calvert Theater Will Open on May 6, as Sixteenth Warner Brothers Unit in the National Capital; Burton Holmes Will Be Back Next Season for Five Traveltalks; Notes.

ANN HARDING never has struck this commentator as being an actress able to imbue her impersonations with sympathy and warmth, but in "Love From a Stranger," which was unreeled for the benefit of the drama desks yesterday afternoon in the private projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange, she largely overcame that unfortunate impression.

BELL.

There may be no great heat wave discernible in this Trafalgar production, released in America through United Artists, but, at least, there is a sudden and eruptive display of tense drama that calls upon this blonde star to let go with everything she has in the matter of suspenseful climax.

Of Basil Rathbone there never has been any doubt. Mr. Rathbone, in this subject, has a role that is thoroughly distasteful, but one which he plays to the last measure of effectiveness. As a shell-shocked and mentally impaired victim of the World War, who makes a specialty of winning romantically inclined young women and then slaying them in cold blood, Rathbone creates the complete delusion of a madman. The manner in which his sinister plans are circumvented by Carol Howard, his latest bride, will not be disclosed here, but it may safely be set down as one of the most dramatic situations that have found their way to the screen in many a month.

Mr. Rathbone, beyond any member of the cast, seems able to visualize a complete picture of the character he is supposed to portray. There is madness in his eyes, a supreme egotism in his speech and a convincing assumption of a bizarre character that really makes him the star of the picture, regardless of the excellent work of Miss Harding and the supporting ensemble.

Miss Harding's is no light job, at that. She is called upon to depict the role of a young woman who has just won a tremendously valuable sweepstakes prize in the French lottery, only to learn that the handsome soldier of fortune to whom she is precipitately wed is a raving maniac.

She plays the part of Carol with a breathlessness, a submerged fear and a final outburst of self-assertiveness that delivers her from the fate of Gerald Lovell's earlier wives and sets this performance down as perhaps the best she has done since "East Lynne."

The whole appeal of this drama, written by Frances Marion, and directed by Rowland V. Lee, rests in the taut maintenance of its melodramatic development. The supplementary figures are only that, although they are played with considerable skill by the cast that has been assembled largely from the other side.

The entire affair has been staged with impeccable taste and directed with a fine observance of the demands of a play that depends on suspense for its major element of appeal. The story, to be sure, is a bit on the side of the fantastic, but it possesses the priceless asset of compiling a direct and all-important quality of curiosity on the part of the spectator.

There will be a complete review of this subject in these columns on Saturday morning, after its official opening on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday.

Until then, rest assured that here is a picture that gets fairly well away from the stereotyped forms of melodramatic entertainment. And bear in mind, too, that it is Basil Rathbone who is star of the film—not Miss Harding.

The Warner Brothers' Calvert Theater, now nearing completion at 2324 Wisconsin avenue northwest, will be opened to the public on Thursday, May 6, according to announcement just made by Zone Manager John J. Payette, of the Warner interests in this territory. Located between Hall place and Calvert street, the new theater will be a community playhouse catering to the entertainment demands of a potential audience of approximately 40,000 residents of Old Georgetown, Cathedral Heights and Massachusett Park.

The Globe Amusement Co. of Washington, of which Joseph Makover is president, is building the Calvert, which will be the sixteenth theater under the management of the Warner Brothers in the National Capital. The theater was designed by John Eberson, who recently erected the Penn Theater for the same operating interests and is an internationally known theater architect. He looks so much like the late Victor Herbert that they might have been twins.

With all of the seats on one floor, the Calvert will have a total capacity of 1,100. Complete air conditioning has been installed to insure even temperatures throughout the year. Three stores will be included in the Calvert development.

Our old friend, Mr. Samuel A. Galanty, that high-strung Southern gentleman who serves as division manager for Columbia Pictures in this territory, has been made zone chairman of the Will Rogers Memorial Fund and is now completing plans for the fund's annual theater campaign to be launched this year on April 30.

John J. Payette, in charge of the theater campaign unit, announces that the motion picture theaters of Washington will co-operate with the Will Rogers Memorial Commission to make the local drive a record-breaking success.

Last year the commission took over the former NVA Sanitarium on Saranac Lake, N. Y., and is endowing and maintaining this great and humanitarian institution in memory of the cowboy-philosopher who would have liked nothing better than some such substantial testimony to the esteem in which he was held by his profession.

The Saranac institution is dedicated to the treatment of all members of the theatrical calling.

The Community Center Department of the D. C. Public Schools announces that Burton Holmes, America's veteran and favorite speaker on travel topics, will return to the Capital next season under that group's auspices to deliver a series of five travel talks. Mr. Holmes is said to be contemplating leaving his native shores shortly for a trip to Africa, which will form the basis of one of the new series of travelogues. Other topics will be announced at a later time. The dates of next season's talks will be January 12, 19 and 26 and February 2 and 9. The lectures will be given, as was the case last season, in the auditorium of Roosevelt High School, Thirteenth and Upshur streets northwest.

Signs-of-Spring Note.

That was a violet I stepped on yesterday, not a robin.

Trotzky Files Data To Contradict Plot

Mexico City, April 13 (AP).—Leon Trotzky today presented to the commission of liberals hearing his defense against Soviet charges of treason voluminous documentary evidence intended to prove he could not have plotted against the Soviet Union in Paris in 1933.

The exiled former Bolshvist leader, using maps, depositions and verbal testimony, traced his movements during the summer of 1933 to back his contention he could not have kept the conspirators' redezvous in Paris which his attorney, Albert Goldman, of Chicago, said constituted "a good half of the Soviets' case" against Trotzky.

At the Moscow trial in January, Vladimir Romm, former Washington correspondent for the Soviet newspaper Izvestia, declared he met Trotzky in the Bois du Boulogne in 1933 and agreed to become his undercover agent.

Naval Planes End Flight at Honolulu

Honolulu, April 13 (AP).—Naval aviators completed today the third "routine transfer" of fighting planes from the mainland to Honolulu with the arrival of 12 air cruisers, bearing 78 men on a nonstop flight from San Diego, Calif.

The big planes negotiated the 2,553-mile all-water route without trouble, arriving in formation officially at 12:15 p m., Pacific standard time (3:15 p. m., E. S. T.) to make the flying time 21 hours 25 minutes.

6 Crushed by Trains.

Moscow, April 13 (AP).—Six persons were killed and 13 injured in a Moscow suburb today when two overcrowded trains, passing each other, crushed together clusters of passengers hanging on the steps of each.

They Go Exotic in Their Next

Bing Crosby and Martha Raye, as you can plainly see, are about to dash into the rhythmic undulations of the Hula-Hula dance, native to Hawaii. This is eminently fitting, since their next picture, to be shown on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater for the week beginning Friday, is "Waikiki Wedding," a story of the pineapple islands. Bob Burns and Shirley Ross, not to mention George Barbier, are importantly cast in this tuneful subject.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

HOLLYWOOD, April 13.

Idol chatter: Shades of East Tennessee hills: Fourteen-year-old Deanna Durbin has had 32 marriage proposals! Basil Rathbone scares me more with his cold smile than with his frown. Peas from the same pod: Francine Larrimore and Wynne Gibson. I would have been heartbroken had Simone Simon pouted or James Stewart wagged his eyebrows in "Seventh Heaven." Wonder if George smiles when jerk-water cafe waiters scream: "Adam and Eve on a raft!" Gary Cooper and Spencer Tracy wear worried brows.

COOPER.

Aside to gossip reporters: When you see a different variety of flowers on Herbert Marshall's Cafe LaMaze table every evening, cher-chez la femme.

It strikes me that Virginia Bruce is almost the last actress to wear her own, non-re-routed eyebrows. Critic's comment I never expect to read: "Victor McLaglen was too soft for the army officer role."

So-this-is-life note: Ross Alexander's best screen performance is in the picture he made just before his death.

I suppose the reason Joan Fontaine gets so much "sister of Olivia De Haviland" publicity is the clause in her contract which forbids it. Impressionistic drawing of Marion Davies: A delayed "Gibson Girl" looking for the early nineteen-hundreds. Sylvia Sidney's smile reminds me of laughter through tears.

Why does Constance Bennett's beauty seem old-fashioned, and Joan Crawford's so excitingly modern?

Maybe Elissa Landi should write herself a good role, she has had so little picture luck of late.

It did my heart good to see a certain egotistical singer taken down a peg the other night by Douglas Fowley, a young actor who is making good as a screen comedian, but got his original training in dramatic roles. It took place in a night club, where a volunteer master of ceremonies asked Doug to sing. He sang "Pennies From Heaven," and did a fair job of it. But the next person called was the egotistical singer, who also delivered "Pennies From Heaven" and made Fowley's rendition sound pretty bad.

The chap's discourtesy got under Doug's chin. He returned to the microphone and delivered an oration from Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar." He did a striking job that stopped the noisy night club audience cold in its tracks. After he finished, Doug waited for the applause to die out, then turned to the conceited singer and cracked, "All right, Mr. Sarah Bernhardt—top that."

Harold Lloyd got credit, but it was a rival comedian who pulled the line. It was during a Lloyd party—one of those vast Hollywood gatherings that resemble a family reunion of the Joneses or the Smiths. Everybody was goggle-eyed over the six drawing rooms, the elevator, the golf course, the swimming pool and the switchboard with almost a hundred connections. It was the rival comedian who stood up in the amphitheater-like dining room and chirped, "It ain't much, folks, but it's home!"

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Under the direction of Hugh Ross, the National Choral Union gave its first concert last evening in the Washington Cathedral before a large and attentive audience. Recently formed for the dual purpose of stimulating the interest of singers and public in the art of liturgical and religious music and of affording choirmasters the opportunity to increase their efficiency, the new organization numbers about 100 voices representing five church choirs.

Presented as a demonstration of the quality of music being studied and of the results already accomplished in this co-operative effort, the program gave rise to optimistic expectations for the future of the Choral Union. The disciplinary effect of so authoritative and accomplished a director as Hugh Ross was evident in the precision of attack, the clarity of the part-singing and the zeal of the singers. As might have been expected from the conductor of the New York Schola Cantorum, the choice of compositions showed an intent to bring forth some worthy music that is seldom heard.

The novelties included, as is often the case when a musical scholar is empowered to select, two admirable examples of early church music: an impressive setting of "In Ecclesiis" for double chorus, strings, brass and organ, by Giovanni Gabrieli, organist of St. Mark's in Venice at the close of the sixteenth century, and a lively and difficult "Alleluia" by Alessandro Scarlatti, whose operatic fame sometimes obscures the fact that he composed noble music for the church.

There was also an excellent and stirring setting of "Exultate Deo" by the American composer, Mabel Daniels, who writes with a sure sense of vocal values. In contrast was the quiet and meditatively aspiring "O Lord Most Holy" by Cesar Franck.

Familiar numbers were heard in Handel's "And the Glory of the Lord," Seth Bingham's "The Strife Is O'er," and Stainer's "God So Loved the World." Ross Farrar sang Mendelssohn's "If With All Your Heart," and Cathreen Carrico offered Bach's "Open Wide, My Heart, Thy Portals" and the "Alleluia" from Mozart's motet, "Exsultate, Jubilate." As an instrumental interlude, the brass choir and organ joined in a "Sonata da Camera" by Rosenmuller, which should, by virtue of its devotional character, have been called a "Sonata da Chiesa."

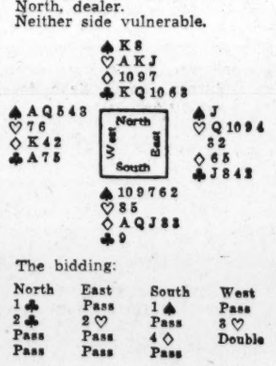
Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

A Question of Rebids.

Rebids often involve hairline decisions and the fate of many a hand is determined by the shrewdness with which such problems are solved. Watching an expert game recently, I made special note of the following hand:

North, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	2 ♡	Pass	3 ♡
Pass	Pass	4 ◇	Double
Pass	Pass

I have given the bidding as it actually occurred and, in reviewing East's two heart bid, I think I had better hasten to withdraw my previous assertion that this was an "expert game." East, obviously, was a wild bidder, to interpolate this virtually psychic bid at the two level even though he was not vulnerable.

Strangely enough, however, the bidding panned out well for his side. South rightly concluded that his hand was not strong enough for a free three diamond bid at this point. West's three heart bid, as he afterward explained, was pretty much of a trap. He considered his side suit tricks of sufficient number to shatter the adequate trump support requirement. As he put it later, he thought East must have a good six-card suit since he could not have a great deal outside. But East's heart bid and West's raise both depended on an extraneous factor. Sitting beside the North player, I speculated as to what rebid he would make over the one spade response and had determined in my own mind of the two possible rebids—two clubs and one notrump—the latter had a decided "edge." Perhaps North, in selecting two clubs, felt that he was making a slightly stronger rebid than one notrump, but, in the interpretation of all the experts that I know, this is not the fact. The two bids are practically identical insofar as high-card strength is concerned, but the club bid is apt to be passed on an unevenly distributed hand, whereas the notrump suggests strength in three suits and fairly balanced distribution. A 5-3-3-2 distribution falls into the balanced rather than the unbalanced category and, since North had strength in two suits, I feel that one notrump would have been definitely superior to two clubs.

Had North actually rebid one notrump, it is extremely doubtful that East would have over-called since he would expect the notrump bidder to have some heart strength and, with East passing to a notrump rebid, South would be able to make the shrewd bid of two notrump rather than show the diamond suit at all. North would then bid three notrump and, whether or not West doubled, East would probably open a heart. North would have no difficulty in making nine tricks. The four diamond contract actually reached was defeated one trick.

This Morning

WITH SHIRLEY POVICH

Atlanta, Ga.

Buck Newsom, the Hartsville Breeze, who fancies himself both as a pitcher and a radio orator, was eagerly submitting to an interview over an Atlanta station today when the question was popped:

"What was the greatest game you ever pitched, Buck?"

POVICH.

Bashful Buck didn't need any further cue. He launched into a detailed review of the career of the great Newsom and Atlanta listeners were getting an earful of pitching heroics which, if true, were truly wonderful. And of their truth, there is no doubt.

"The greatest game I ever pitched?" began Bashful Buck, "well, that's hard to say. Personally, I liked that game in Washington in 1935 when Earl Averill broke my leg with a line drive in the third inning and I pitched the last six innings on one leg. They beat me, 3-2, but I always though that was a pretty good game.

Am I Great?

"Maybe it wasn't my best, though. How about that opening game I worked last year at Griffith Stadium against the Yankees? Ossie Bluege knocked me cold with a throw across the infield that hit me on the chin in the fifth inning. I liked the way I stayed in the game and beat Gomez, 1-0. I gave those Yanks only four hits that day.

"You know, though, when I begin to think about it, maybe that one I pitched out in St. Louis in 1934 was my best. Maybe I should like that best. You remember that one. The Red Sox didn't get a hit off me for nine innings. I had a no-hit game in my possession, but the Browns couldn't score a run for me. I had to go into extra innings and Roy Johnson beat me, 1-0, with a hit after a base on balls and an error put a man on third base.

"Yeah, I guess that was my best game. That one in St. Louis. But I dunno, though. That was a pretty nice ball game I had up there in Washington last summer against Detroit. That was a one-hitter, against a real slugging club."

"I Robbed Buck"

At which point Bashful Buck's interviewer, who happened to be a Washington baseball writer, broke in to vouchsafe the information that that particular ball game was a truly great performance by Newsom.

"I'd say it was the best pitched game I ever saw," chimed in the veteran baseball writer. "And the one hit they got off Buck was a scratch affair that might have been scored as an error. And right here and now you're hearing that from the man who was the official scorer at that game. I'm the guy who robbed Buck of a no-hitter, perhaps.

* * *

"The one hit the Tigers got was a cheap affair off the bat of Jack Burns. It was an infield ball that Joe Kuhel attempted to field and muffed. If he had let Second Baseman Ossie Bluege handle it, it would have been an easy out. But he didn't, and I had to call it a hit the way it was played.

"Well, I Was Robbed"

"Sometimes, Buck, I think I should have scored that an error, and that I robbed you of a no-hitter. Other times, Buck, I think I was right. What do you think, Buck?

Whereupon Newsom dashed back to the microphone and shouted:

"You were right, my friend—I was robbed."

In Short—

Steve Basil, the American League umpire who has been assigned to the Nats during the club's barnstorming trip North, is the first cousin of Pete Sarron, the world featherweight champion . . . and reveals that Sarron's real name is Pete Sara . . . despite his cousin's rise to fame in the prize ring, Basil has never seen Sarron . . . on the night Sarron won the world championship from Freddie Miller, at Griffith Stadium, Basil was in a Washington movie theater . . . Scout Joe Engel's influence was the factor that kept Freddie Sington with the Nats when Manager Bucky Harris, disappointed at the big fellow's hitting, was on the verge of releasing him to Chattanooga . . . Engel emphatically told Harris that Sington is a poor hitter in the spring and offered to wager that Sington would hit .330 against American League pitching if retained by the Nats . . . the baseball fates have been unkind to Jack Salveson, who was left behind at Chattanooga by the Nats . . . the big right-hander, who was the Coast League's leading pitcher last season, now finds himself in a league with a $400-per-month salary limit . . . despite the fact that he was an outstanding success in a Class AA league which would permit him to earn a salary of nearly $800 per month . . . Pete Jacobs Elected Spider Court Captain

Richmond, Va., April 13 (AP).—Albert "Pete" Jacobs, of Lawrenceville, Va., was today elected captain of the University of Richmond basketball team for 1938.

Jacobs, a star performer with his brother, "Bucky" Jacobs, on the Spider Varsity during the past two years, also holds two letters in baseball. He played guard with the court team and third base with the diamond aggregation.

MacFayden Holds Nats; Lewis Fails

Nat Pitcher Jeopardizes Opening Day Role; Allows 12 Hits.

Sington and Stone Clout Homers for Nats Only Runs, 7,000 Attend.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Gastonia, N. C., April 13.—Gastonia's citizenry to the number of 7,000 heaped honors on Buddy Lewis this afternoon and the Boston Braves heaped disgrace on the Nationals.

Washington's baseball athletes, led by the uninspiring pitching of Buck Newsom, ran smack into a 8-3 beating by the unfashionable Boston National League club, but the Nats were a tremendous success compared to the hapless young John Kelly Lewis.

In the hour of home coming before Gastonia's mill town natives, young J. K. was a terrific floperoo from the time that Mayor Emery Denny greeted him at the plate in his first appearance at bat, spoke a pretty piece about Gastonia's pride in its native son and, as players of both teams stood bareheaded in mute respect, presented the Washington third baseman with a handsome traveling bag.

Young Buddy, with his Mom and Pop and five sisters in the stands and the Gastonia High School grounds thronged with folks who came to see him as a big leaguer, might just as well have been swinging a papier mache bat.

Against the crafty pitching of venerable Denny MacFayden, of the Braves, J. K. was something of a chump. He couldn't get the ball out of the infield in four turns at bat and half in compassion, half in necessity, Manager Harris withdrew him from the line-up in the seventh inning.

The game was interrupted for the Buddy Lewis Day reception ceremonies in the first inning when young J. K. came to bat and was greeted by the Mayor. The ceremonies over, Buddy promptly hit into a double play.

To complete his dismal afternoon young Lewis managed to get himself hit on the left wrist by a bad hop off Wally Berger's bat in the seventh inning and withdrew in great pain to the Nats' dugout, Johnny Mihalic replacing him. His injury was diagnosed as a not serious bruise.

The hundred folks from Hartsville, S. C., who made the 100-mile trip here to see their native son, Buck Newsom, go the route against the Braves, had nothing to cheer about, either. Newsom seriously jeopordized his chances of winning the Nats opening game assignment with a dreary performance out of which the Braves collected 12 hits.

Newsom had his moments, though—he struck out eight of the Braves.

Washington was able to avert a shutout defeat by the bespectacled MacFayden, a reformed American Leaguer, only through the good offices of Freddie Sington and Johnny Stone, who were swinging a pair of home run bats. Sington's clout over the leftfield terrace in the fourth and Stone's wallop into the rhubarb beyond the right field fence in the sixth with a man on base, accounted for all of the Nats' runs. MacFayden held 'em to eight hits.

The Braves didn't dally with Newsom, who filled the bases with none out in the first inning by pitching a single to Garms, hitting Vince DiMaggio in the ribs and walking Gene Moore. At this point, Wally Berger, the Boston Club's powerhouse, sort of pushed a double over Jesse Hill's head in centerfield and two runners scored. The Braves had a 3-0 lead when Moore crossed the plate on Cuccinello's long fly.

Sington's homer cut that lead to 3-1 in the fourth, but the Braves replied with another pair of runs in their half of the inning, the contribution of Pitcher MacFayden, who singled into rightfield with a pair of colleagues in scoring position.

The Sington-Stone combination put the Nats back in the ball game in the sixth when Sington walked and Stone walloped a pitch over the rightfield foliage to narrow the score to 5-3, but Newsom upped it

Western's Champions Trounce Central, 10-2; Tech Rally Halts Wilson, 11-10, in 10 Innings

By John R. Vosburgh.

In a couple of wild games, Western's interhigh champions routed Central, 10 to 2, yesterday in Central Stadium and Tech rallied to take a ten-inning marathon from Wilson, 11 to 10, at Roosevelt in the opening ceremonies of the interhigh baseball series.

It was all a bit weird even for schoolboy baseball, especially when Tech went into the last half of the ninth trailing, 10-4, scored six runs and then won in the tenth when Relief Pitcher Jimmy Webb doubled to win his own game.

Woodrow Wilson appeared well on the way to a brilliant interhigh debut before that ninth inning. Young Kilmer Bortz, strikeout specialist of the Green, was in top form, allowing only five hits before the final frame.

The latter, however, was a sad story. Leroy Curtis, of Tech, started the Maroon rally with a stinging double, Walt Merchant singled, Jim Wise was safe on Raffe Messrobian's error and Lemerise cleared the sacks with a triple and scored on Mesrobian's poor relay. Wilson still had a 10-8 lead, but Bortz was up in the air by this time and walked Jack Gordon and Charlie Kendall, whereupon he took a walk himself—to the bench.

Coach Carl Heintell inserted Bill Garland in the box and the first thing he did was hit Abe Fillah on the shoulder, walk Curtis, commit a balk which scored Gordon and force in Kendall with the tying run by walking Merchant.

Garland fanned to open the Wilson tenth and Webb walked Hawksworth but a neat double play on Mesrobian's grounder, Gordon to Curtis to Kendall, retired the Woodies.

There were no outs when the winning run across the plate. Garland walked Lemerise and along came the stocky, broad-shouldered Webb with his two-bagger to right-center to break up the ball game.

Wilson had piled up its early lead despite 11 strike-outs suffered at the hands of Tommy Doonis, Tech pitcher. Billy Hawksworth and Jack Hoskinson were leading the attack which added two runs in the third. two in the fifth and two more in the eighth. Hawksworth, incidentally, had a perfect day at bat, with two singles and a double.

Outhit, 13 to 9, Tech was able to score only occasionally until the ninth. In the ensuing rally, the triple by Lemerise, with Curtis, Merchant and Wise on the sacks, signalized Bortz' decline and Tech's rise. The erratic streak of Relief Pitcher Garland followed the erratic streak of Pitcher Bortz and Mr. Webb took care of the rest with his pitching and his double.

Western, on the other hand, was far from outhit, collecting 15 bingles off three Central pitchers, while George (Toby) Bright, cool lefthander, was limiting Central to 7 hits. Rightfielder George Gertel led the stick wielding with 4 hits and Johnny Alafoginas lent a helping hand with two singles and a home run.

The homer to deep center came with Middleton on base in the third. This was followed by a single from Mr. Bright, which signalized the departure of Bill Noonan. Oeretel welcomed Relief Pitcher Jones with a triple and Gene Cleary, Addie Lawyer. Len Weinstein and Middleton again followed with singles, to push over 6 runs and stretch the Western lead to 10 to 0.

Bright barely missed a shut-out. With two gone in the ninth, the southpaw was knicked for a single by Dick Smith, with Joe Feuz and Jones on the sacks. The hit drove in both of Central's runs, but failed to mar greatly the general appearance of Western's champs, 1937 model.

Fredericksburg Spills Eastern, 4-1, as 20 Fan

The strikeout pitching of Randolph Heflin, who fanned 20 Eastern High batters, was too much for the Lincoln Parkers yesterday and Fredericksburg (Va.) High took a 4-1 decision on Eastern's field. Heflin, a right-hander, allowed but three hits.

The Virginians, coached by Johnny Fenlon, former G. W. football star, scored in the first inning when Wholey was safe on Al Kidwell's error, stole second and crossed the plate on Cliff Ingals' single. In the

Rep. Cannon Again Raps At Magnates

Says Wagner Labor Act Upholds Contention, Demands Action.

By Dillon Graham.
Associated Press Sports Writer

Representative Raymond Cannon, of Wisconsin, who says baseball players are virtually slaves of the club owners, wound up today and pitched another fast ball at the "magnates."

He said that recent Supreme Court decisions, including those sustaining the Wagner labor relations act yesterday, upheld his contention that profesional baseball is interstate commerce and that the owners are violating the anti-trust laws.

A fortnight ago Cannon wrote Attorney General Cummings for an investigation of club owners on the ground that the contract system under which players are "owned" violated the law.

He has received no reply. He said today he would write Cummings again and threatened to carry his fight to Congress unless the Justice Department acted.

"I shall take steps to have Congress amend the law to eliminate all doubt as to its applicability, to investigate the situation, and if need be to pass legislation," he asserted.

Cummings Doubts Violations.

Cannon said he has seen press reports that Cummings had doubts as to the violation of the act, because of a high court decision in the case of the Federal League vs. the National League in 1922. The high court held that while ball players crossed State lines, this did not constitute interstate commerce.

"That case did not involve nor did it pass on the ball players' contracts," Cannon said. "It was a fight between two baseball leagues and the rights of the players were not involved."

Cannon said that in his opinion the court decisions yesterday in sustaining the Wagner labor relations act "clearly overrule the Federal League vs. the National League decision."

Denemark and Lawyer Meanwhile Seek to Clear Charges.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 13.—Bert S. Michell, trainer of Mrs. Emil Denemark's race horses, gave up his position today, saying a charge by the Florida Racing Commission that he artifically stimulated a horse made it detrimental to Mrs. Denemark's interests that he remain in her employ until the charge is settled.

Dan Chappell, Miami attorney who is defending Michell, said he would go to New York tonight to investigate a report that the test which resulted in the charge against Michell had been made by a new laboratory.

Chappell said he understood a saliva test of a horse on which the accusation is based was made not "by the laboratory of the New York State Racing Commission, the regular chemist of the Florida commission, but by a new concern."

Charge Is "Silly."

Emil Denemark, Chicago sportsman, conferred with Chappell and Michell on their next step in fighting the charge. Denemark said if necessary he would leave for Florida within a day or so to seek vindication of the trainer before the racing commission.

Denemark said the charge "sounds silly" and pointed out it was made in connection with a horse that finished eighth. He added:

"We are going to fight this thing to a finish."

He said the Denemark stables may be withdrawn from racing unless the trainer is cleared of the charge.

Michell's Letter.

Michell said he did not want it believed that he was training the Denemark horses through June Johnson, the stable foreman, who now has charge of the string.

Michell's letter to Mrs. Emil Denemark follows:

Havre de Grace, Md., April 14, 1937.

Dear Mrs. Emil Denemark:

It is with regret that I tender my resignation as trainer of your horses. Owing to the charge against me with the Florida Racing Commission at the present time and pending their decision and results, I feel it would be detrimental to your interests and your horses to remain in your employ, under the present circumstances. I remain, yours respectfully,

BERT S. MICHELL.

Over the Top Beats Favored Tedious by Head in Graw Feature

Late Sprint Finally Nips Napping Foe

Care For Surprises in Third Race to Pay a $62.50 Mutuel.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 13.—Tearing a page from his daddy's book, Over the Top, a husky son of Man o' War, bounded through the stretch here today to defeat a field of candidates for the Nation's leading 3-year-old stake events, Shaken into a powerful drive by Jockey Eddie DeCamillis, Over the Top scored a neck decision over Tedious, the favorite and an eligible for the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Chesapeake Stakes. The Bomar Stable's Siam managed to salvage third money in the tiny field of five.

Tedius, a brisk worker from the A. G. Vanderbilt stable, appeared to have been poorly ridden. Jockey L. Knapp looked back continually during the running and, with victory apparently assured, he failed to keep his charge in action when DeCamillis placed Over the Top to a drive.

Tedious had the best of the start of the mile and 70 yards contest. Over the Top was slow in gaining momentum, but once under way was placed close to the pace of the Vanderbilt hope. While Knapp looked over his shoulder, seemingly having horse enough to open a long lead whenever he chose. DeCamillis was rating Over the Top and awaiting the stretch run.

Abaddon, representing the Denemark Stable, made a mild bid swinging for the stretch, but tired suddenly. In the stretch, Tedious looked as if he were going through a mere formality of winning. However, DeCamillis suddenly began rallying Over the Top and the colt fairly ate up the ground. Even then, Tedious might have had a chance had not Knapp failed to put his mount to a drive until too late.

Over the Top, eligible for the Preakness, Chesapeake and the Withers, paid a $13.70 mutuel and was clocked in 1:44 3-5. A crowd of 8,000 saw the program conducted under ideal conditions.

Jockey Moose Peters drove Rehearsal, a fine looking daughter of Theatrical, to victory in the day's opening event, for maiden juveniles foaled in Maryland. The filly, teamed in the betting with Actress, led Battle Jack to the wire by three parts of a length, with the photo giving Legal Light, the heavily played favorite, third money in the field of nine. Rehearsal was in front soon after the break, but bore out on Battle Jack through the stretch. The winner, half of the R. H. Heighe entry, paid a $14.30 mutuel and ran the 4 furlongs in 0:48 1-5.

Apprentice Jockey Willie Duffy, a New York boy, suffered painful injuries when thrown against the fence by Mrs. A. J. Abel's Virnock as the horses were going to the post in the second race. Duffy was believed to have suffered a fracture of the left arm. He was rushed to Havre de Grace Hospital. Jockey K. McCombs substituted for Duffy and Virnock ran a powerful race, to be second, beaten a half-length by the Liberty Lane Stable's Sage Girl, a $20.10 shot. Masked Girl was third. The winner was clocked in 1:13 2-5 for the 6 furlongs.

Winning with the greatest of ease, Care For proved an old fashioned long shot and brought Jockey Joe Wagner his second victory of the day. It was to the tune of a $62.50 mutuel that Care For galloped to the finish five lengths in advance of Lina's Son, with Mattapony third. Frisco Kid proved a dull-running favorite. The winner's time for the 6 furlongs was 1:13.

At The Post . . . .

With Bill Bennings

Selections at Havre de Grace.

Dear Al:

I have heard only words of approval of the shift of the daily double to the first and second races instead of the first and third races heretofore used in Maryland. On opening day, the Graw changed the order of the bet and the mutuel department handled the situation in faultless fashion, getting the "possible" pay-offs up early and making the returns quickly. Now that this track has shown the way, the others are almost certain to fall in line. Both the customer and the racing plant are better served by having the double on consecutive races. With one race between, the money stays in the machines and is out of action. The track loses a chance to turn the money over and the customers generally wait to see how their doubles come out before going ahead with betting. Then again, the track has one more race to get a crack at those who cash a large double, if the winners have their money at the conclusion of the second race. Clocker Mike must have turned into quintuplets. He has now been reported in Richmond, Va.; Sumner, S. C.; Bayliss, Ga.; Savannah, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla., within the past 48 hours. When he was at Richmond I thought he would report soon. Now it appears that he is going backwards. Perhaps he forgot his hat.

BILL.

First race—BUNNY BABY ran an even race in the Bowie Kindergarten and appears rightly placed in the day's sprint for juveniles. LOCAL BOY is a fair one from the Vanderbilt Stable and would be dangerous if sent back. MAFUTA'S easy Bowie win and that light weight makes that one dangerous. BROWN MOTH may be better than rated.

Second race—BROADKILL has worked well and may win at the first asking. This is said to be a promising 3-year-old. The entry of MELODIANA and POMPISH is formidable. HIGH VELOCITY has been idle since last year and is a possibility.

Third race—DEFLATE gets the call here on workouts. Gets in action with feather weight and likes this track. WHITE COCKADE raced excellently during the winter and is the one to beat. DUSKY PRINCE, of the Vanderbilt entry, may surprise.

Fourth race—With a three-horse entry, the Vanderbilt forces should take down this purse. AIRFLAME is the chief reliance of the group but SAVAGE and STAND IN are reported fit. WAR ADMIRAL has gone well in trials but may need a race. MORNING might take a peek at the money.

Fifth race—BOOTLESS, in with only 106 pounds, may be the surprise package in this field and I'm going to string along. Last year's races say this fellow is the class. TEMPESTUOUS and the Denemark entry of GENIE PALATINE and FLORADORA for the place and show.

Sixth race—FLAGSTONE was hardly out of a pull in winning at Bowie. Needs only the right ride here. CAESAR'S GHOST has some class and may be the one to beat. CREDULOUS, primed in the sprints is a threat.

Seventh race—TRAGEDIAN, POPO and SUN ABBOT is the way I prefer them in the day's finals. RUNNING WATER has worked well and could be close despite being a cheap plater.

Best bet—FLAGSTONE.

Agua Caliente to Open With Racing on July 4

Los Angeles, April 13 (AP).—Agua Caliente may open by the Fourth of July with all of its old-time splendor, Baron Long said today.

The resort will operate without a gambling casino, in conformity with Mexican gambling laws which sent it into hibernation.

Gallagher Foe Of McDonald at Arena Monday

Heavyweights to Feature Card; Marty Back at Hard Grind.

Marty Gallagher, pride of Foggy Bottom, will be pitted against Sandy McDonald, a 6-foot, 210-pound Texas heavyweight, next Monday night in the ten-round feature match at Turner's Arena.

Gallagher will be making his first appearance in a District ring since last September, when he fought Buck Everett at Griffith Stadium.

McDonald, known as the Texas Ranger, is handled by Charlie Seigel, and has scored more than 50 per cent of his victories via the knockout route.

Down at Griffith Farm, where Tom O'Donnell has erected an elaborate training camp, Gallagher has been working out daily with Natie Brown, another District heavyweight.

Ted Key, who played under his brother's name on the University of California (Los Angeles) football team until his false registration became known, will be a marked man in his preliminary wrestling match with Stanley Pinto, the Bohemian grappler, tomorrow night at Turner's Arena.

Key's real name is Clois Francis (Shorty) Key, and he was the standout player on the Bruins' eleven at fullback until they discovered he was an imposter, and he was expeled.

Laverne Baxter, the villain of villains who authorized the riot Saturday night at the Arena, will meet Wee Willie Davis in the feature match. Cliff Olsen faces Bank Barber in the semiwindup, and in other preliminaries Mike Mazurki opposes Marshall Blackstock and Bill Sledge tackles Jim Coffield.

Promoter Turner has informed Baxter that he will not tolerate any further nonsense. He will be barred, just as Koverly was, if he starts "conking" people as he did last week.

Basketball Major Sport at Harvard

Cambridge, Mass., April 13 (AP).—Basketball became a major sport tonight at Harvard University.

The university's committee on regulation of athletic sports announced the hoopsters would operate on a major basis with the start of the 1937-38 season.

The sports board acted after the student council and undergraduate athletic council recommended the elevation.

DiMaggio's Ailing Arm Is Examined

Knoxville, Tenn., April 13 (AP).—Joe Di Maggio, the Yankee outfielder, underwent an examination here today to determine the cause of his ailing throwing arm.

Joe McCarthy, manager of the New York World champions, said Di Maggio's arm had been "bothering him for the last two weeks."

McCarthy refused to comment on a report that Di Maggio's condition is due to infected tonsils.

Braddock Is Outdoors At Stone Lake Camp

Stone Lake, Wis., April 13 (AP).—Heavyweight Champion Jim Braddock headed today into the most serious phase of his training program.

Braddock concentrated on outdoor work that was his design in selecting Stone Lake as a training site for his title fight with Joe Louis. The gym is ready for the champion when he says the word, but he has set no date for active indoor work.

Va. Trackmen Vie.

Charlottesville, Va., April 13.—The University of Virginia's embattled track team will engage North Carolina here tomorrow afternoon in a mid-week dual meet.

Terps Oppose W. & L. Track Team Today

G. U. Nine Plays Loyola; Colonials Host to U. of Delaware.

College athletes will be busy on three fronts today as the George Washington and Georgetown baseball teams take up their cudgels in search of new luarels, while Marylands' trackmen toe the mark with those of Washington and Lee.

The Colonials meet Delaware at 2:30 o'clock on the East Ellipse with Vince De Angelis scheduled to pitch. Georgetown plays Loyola of Baltimore a half hour later at the Hilltop. Joe Judge had not selected his starting pitcher last night but indicated it would be one of three men, Bertrand, Reynolds or Ruppert.

Maryland's runners will be augmented by the return of Joe Ryan, with a bad leg. Ryan's presence sprinter, who has been on the shelf will enable Coach Geary Eppley to use Frank Cronin in his usual place, the quarter-mile run.

The Old Line baseball team is preparing for its lone engagement of the week with Michigan on Friday, while the lacrosse squad is pointing for Saturday's duel with Mount Washington at Baltimore. In four games the Terps' diamond aggregation made 51 runs and is undefeated.

The lacrosse squad launched its campaign in negative style, bowing to the Baltimore A. C., 8-6, in a heated overtime match, but Coach Jack Faber is satisfied with his men's performance. Maryland, incidentally, made no substitutions, the tip-off on the quality of the reserves.

Mount Washington boasts one of the strongest teams in the East, if not the best, and is a heavy favorite to whip its younger foe.

Unlimited Nines, Note.

Eckington A. C. is booking games with teams that have fields. We particularly want teams that will offer competition. Call North 2009.

REHEARSAL, off alertly, was rushed to the front at the break, opened a good lead and bore out slightly on BATTLE JACK through the stretch while under a drive. BATTLE JACK was close to the pace to the stretch, rallied under a drive, but O'Malley could not do his mount justice. LEGAL LIGHT was forced to race wide most of the way and finished willingly. ACTRESS dropped back soon after the break and saved ground thereafter. DARK FLYER, off poorly, had something taken out of him reaching contention and ran very wide into the stretch while racing greenly. The others had no excuses.

SAGE GIRL steadied along on the outside and off the ace of ADDIS ABABA and SYLVIA G. to the far turn, took command when placed to drive and held on willingly in closing stages. VIRNOCK went into fence going to post and was slow to get under way, rallied sharply in the stretch, but hung in the final sixteenth. MASKED GAL gained steadily to the stretch turn and fought it out willingly. SYLVIA G. was forced to race on the inside all the way and tired slightly. TOP TAX went forwardly for a quarter. The others were outrun.

CARE FOR went up on the inside to take command over MATTAPONY without effort, opened a safe lead entering the stretch, and was being taken in hand at the end. LINA'S SON found racing room along the rail entering the stretch and closed gamely, but could not menace the winner. MATTAPONY, first away, tired gradually from hustling tactics at the start. FRISCO KID could not keep up. ALEXANDRINE had some early speed.

OVER THE TOP, rated along close to the pace of TEDIOUS, rallied sharply when placed to drive in the early stretch and under vigorous handling, was up in the final 50 yards. TEDIOUS, poorly handled, was allowed to run in spots while setting the pace and DeCamillis outrode Knapp when it came to a drive. SIAM was under restraint while within striking distance of the leaders throughout, but rallied only mildly when shaken up. ABADDON came through on the rail leaving the backstretch to loom menacingly, but tired. FRANCESCO was given a long warm-up before the race and performed in very dull fashion.

Nats to Face Bees In '37 Home Debut

By a Staff Correspondent.

Somewhere in North Carolina en Route to Washington.—Rail-weary and slightly bedraggled, Washington's baseball athletes were headed for Griffith Stadium tonight after seven weeks in the South.

Needing no apologies for their record in 24 exhibition games which found them winning 15 and losing 9 after compiling at one period a succession of 8 straight triumphs, the sun-tanned Nats were to arrive in the Capital at an early hour tomorrow morning.

Tomorrow afternoon Washington fans will be offered a preview of the Nats' regular line-up when Manager Bucky Harris sends his athletes against the Boston Braves in an exhibition battle at Mr. Griffith's stadium scheduled for 3 o'clock.

On display there will be two performers whose presence with the Nats this year have occasioned glowing tales from the South and apparently boomed Washington pennant chances. For the first time since he made his entrance into the American League 13 years ago, Outfielder Al Simmons will be attired in a Washington uniform.

Behind the bat will be the large figure of J. Francis Hogan who, despite his 225 pounds is almost literally only a shadow of his former huge self. To Hogan's clever catching, Manager Harris is looking for an improvement in Washington's woeful pitching of last year.

Joe Cascarella, whose last pitching effort in the South was a three-hit performance against Chattanooga, and who has taken his place as a regular starter for Harris, is expected to face the Braves on the mound tomorrow. In the event that Cascarella's bruised toe has not yet fully recovered, rotund Ed Linke will get the pitching assignment.

With Cecel Travis now firmly entrenched at the shotstop post, and Buddy Myer recovered from his illness of last season, the Nats infield now reads from right to left, Joe Kuhel, Myer, Travis and Buddy Lewis.

The lone notable development of the Nats' homeward trip has been big Freddie Sington's desperate attempt to regain his outfield job from Al Simmons. Benched for weak hitting several days ago, Sington has been mauling the ball during Simmons' absence from the club and regained a place in the esteem of Manager Harris.

Georgetown and Nats Resume Old Rivalry

Washington's exhibition game with Georgetown Friday re-awakens many fond memories in the hearts of old-timers who recall the 1922-23 games between the two. The Senators took both by close margins, as the Hoyas exceeded their supporters' wildest hopes.

Clark Griffith, then managing the team, was—and still is—superstitious about losing before the opening league game, and the Georgetown game was only three days before the curtain-raiser. Little wonder then that Griff tore his hair in dismay when the Hoyas almost upset their highly regarded professional contemporaries.

Artie Reynolds, a bespectacled youth, pitched the last game for Georgetown and did a respectable job. His infield consisted of Clayton Sheedy, first base; Murphy, shortstop; Gus Malley, second base, and Jack Flavin, third base. Bill Kenyon caught, and oufielding was divided up among Del Bissonette, who also pitched and later played first; Sam Hyman, Bernie McCarthy, Sheridan, Paul Florence and another Murphy.

Most of the pitchers played the outfield when not in the box to get the advantage of their terrific batting power. All were prodigious hitters. John O'Reilly, their coach, would tell them to lay a bunt down the line, only to see them blast one out of the lot for a homer. He was continually punishing and threatening them for refusing to obey orders.

Paul Mellon's Ace Gelding Scratched in Glenwood Race

By Grace Brooks.
A Staff Correspondent.

Middleburg, Va., April 13.—Four scratches in the Glenwood, a 3-mile timber race and feature of the program, have reduced the field to six to go to the post in this event tomorrow, the closing day of the spring meet of the Middleburg Racing Association at the Glenwood course, estate of D. C. Sands. Paul Mellon's Welbourne Jake and Corn Dodger, Mill River Stable's Gigilo and J. W. Y. Martin's Inshore have been scratched.

Welbourne Jake, winner of the Middleburg Cup on Saturday, has been entered in the Maryland Hunt Cup race. Jack Skinner, trainer of the fleet bay gelding, who sustained a broken collar bone Saturday, when his mount, Dual Control, fell at a fence in the Rose Hill race, will not be able to ride tomorrow, but will pilot Welbourne Jake in the Maryland classic. Dual Control will be ridden by Randy Duffey in the Groveton, a 3-mile timber race, and fourth number on tomorrow's program.

Ray Wolfe will ride Col. Torr's Lassitude in the Glenwood. W. B. Street will ride Ostend. Mike Kerr will be atop Pete Bostwick's Fugitive. Other starters in this race will be Indigo, Pomiochio and Nicias.

The Wanquepin, a 1½-mile hurdle race, first number on the program, will be classed at 2 p. m. The field of 21 entries, largest on the afternoon's program, will be split, racing officials announced. Other numbers on the program are the Little River, 2-mile brush race. The Panther Skin, 2½-mile brush race, and the Covert, a 1½-mile flat race.

With the large number of horses entered, sportsmen are looking forward to a day of good sport. The weather promises to be warmer than Saturday, the opening day, when biting winds chilled the 6,000 spectators. Many visitors have remained in this section for the closing day and a large crowd of racegoers is expected.

to 6-3 in the seventh when he pitched a home run to Gene Moore.

Newsom struck out three Boston hitters in the ninth, but don't jump to conclusions. Because before the Hartsville breeze could negotiate that third out, the Braves picked up another pair of runs on three singles and an unforgivable muff by Johnny Mihalic at third base, a position which had been hexing the Nats all day.

G. U. Banquet Speaker

HARVEY HARMAN.

Penn's Coach, Harvey Harmon, to Address Hoyas' 'G' Fete.

By Lewis P. Atchison.

One of the East's outstanding football coaches and director of one of the most formidable teams on Georgetown's 1937 football schedule, Harvey Harman, of Pennsylvania, will deliver the principal address of the evening at the Hoyas' annual "G" dinner, scheduled Wednesday, April 28, at the Willard Hotel.

Harman's presence at the festive board assures the continuation of a tradition of having one of the country's leading gridiron figures address the banquet. In previous years the late Knute Rockne and Bill Roper, Wallace Wade, Jock Sutherland and Dr. Mal Stevens were the principal speakers.

An alumnus of the University of Pittsburgh, where he starred three years as a tackle, Harman has completed five years of coaching at Penn with a record of 29 victories against 18 defeats and 1 tie. Last season his team survived a strenuous 8-game schedule with only 1 defeat.

Harman's football career began on the sandlots of West Berwick, Pa., where he attended grammar school, and continued at New Castle High School and Peabody High School, Pittsburgh. In his junior year he won western Pennsylvania all-scholastic honors as fullback for New Castle, and at Peabody was named all-Pittsburgh fullback in his senior year.

Entering the University of Pittsburgh in 1918, Harman was a brilliant student as well as prominent athlete.

President of his class in his junior and senior years, a member of the Musical Club, president of the High "P" Club and a brother in Phi Gamma Delta, he also earned the distinction of being tapped for two national honorary societies, Druid and Omicron Delta Kappa.

His first coaching assignment took him to Haverford College, to which school he had been recommended by Pop Warner. He remained there eight years bfore accepting a similar assignment at Sewanee. Penn lured him away from the Southern school after one year with a lucrative contract, and indications are that he will occupy his present position as long as he desires.

U. S. Revenues For March Top Expenditures

Collections, Exceeding a Billion, Are 22.4% Above Year Ago.

New York, April 13.—The Federal Government in March collected the unusually large sum of more than a billion dollars, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. Revenues were 22.4 per cent greater than in the same month last year. At the same time, there was a substantial increase in expenditures. This increase, however, amounting to 16.5 per cent, was less than the gain in receipts.

March was one of those rare months in which receipts exceeded expenditures. It was the first time in a year that this had happened. The last surplus occurred in March a year ago. The surplus this year was greater than it was then, $253,000,000, against $173,000,000.

It is apparent, however, that the showing in March represented, as it did a year ago, only a temporary departure of the Government from its part in contributing to the inflationary movement. The monthly deficits promise to be resumed in April.

Despite the surplus in March, the debt was increased by $127,000,000 to a new high figure of $34,728,000,000. This was due to the fact that the Government not only used the surplus, but borrowed to replenish its Treasury balance, which, at the beginning of March, was considerably below the amount called for in the budget.

Primarily as the result of large receipts in March, revenues during the first nine months of the current fiscal year were $753,000,000 larger than a year ago. At the same time, revenues fell $689,000,000 below the Government's expectations as indicated by the budget made public last January.

Wheat Advances On Crop Damage

Chicago, April 13 (AP).—Crop damage reports from Nebraska and Kansas did much to turn Chicago wheat prices upward late today, and virtually overcome earlier setbacks. The late rally in wheat was in the face of persistent lower quotations on corn, which at times showed 3⅝ cents a bushel collapse owing to prospective large arrivals of Argentine corn here within a week via the Great Lakes. Emphasizing the Nebraska-Kansas crop damage advices was news of dust storms and of moisture shortage in parts of both States.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were varying from ⅜ off to ⅜ up compared with yesterday's finish, May 1.37⅜@1.37½, July 1.23⅞@1.24, September 1.20@1.20½; corn ½@2¼ cents down, May 1.27⅛@1.27⅜, July 1.18½@1.18⅝, September 1.08½@1.08¾; oats at ¼@¾ decline, May 49¼@49⅜, and rye ¾ lower to 1 cent advance. Provisions results showed 15 to 25 cents drop.

Cost of Living Rises Sharply During Month

All Major Items Except Coal Show Advances for March.

New York, April 13.—The cost of living of wage earners rose sharply, 0.8 per cent from February to March, in consequence of increase in the cost of each major group of expenditures except coal. Living costs in March of this year were 5.6 per cent higher than a year ago, and 22.6 per cent higher than in April, 1933, the low point of the depression, but 11.4 below the level of March, 1929.

Food prices rose 1.0 per cent from February to March, which made them 7.7 per cent higher than in March, 1936, and 42.7 per cent higher than at the low of the depression. They were, however, still 15.8 per cent lower than in March, 1929.

Rents again moved upward sharply, increasing 1.7 per cent from February to March. Since a year ago, rents have increased 12.7 per cent, and since the low of January, 1934, 34.3 pc rcent, and they were only 8.5 per cent below the level of March, 1929.

Clothing prices increased 1.2 per cent during the month-interval. In March, 1937, they were 2.6 per cent higher than a year ago, and 25.0 per cent higher than during the low of April, 1933, but still 22.2 per cent lower than in March, 1929.

Coal prices declined seasonally, 0.6 per cent. In March of this year they were 1.0 per cent lower than in March of last year, and 8.4 per cent lower than in March, 1929.

The cost of sundries in March, 1937, was 0.3 per cent higher than in February, 2.1 per cent higher than in March, 1936, 6.9 per cent higher than at the low point of the depression, but 4.1 per cent lower than in March, 1929.

The purchasing value of the dollar was 113.8 cents in March, as compared with 114.7 cents in February, 120.2 cents in March, 1936, and 100 cents in 1923.

Bethlehem Considers Common Dividend

Wilmington, Del., April 13 (AP).—Bethlehem Steel Corporation's current earnings "justify that serious consideration be given to declaring a dividend on the common stock," at the board meeting scheduled for late this month, Eugene G. Grace, president, declared at the annual stockholders' meeting today. The corporation paid $1.50 last December, which was the first disbursement on the common stock since February, 1932.

Grace said preliminary figures indicated the March quarter will "register improved earnings, reflecting the still increasing volume of business which was evidenced progressively through the year 1936."

Stocks Advance in More Active Trading; Government Bonds Firm; Francs Decline.

New York, April 13.—Recovery in stocks, firmness in Government bonds and mixed movements in commodities gave variety to the activities of the financial district. Stock trading was more active in the early hours, but interest declined toward the close. July wheat rose ⅛ of a cent to 123⅞ cents a bushel. Sterling moved above dollars, but the franc again declined.

Stocks were strong from the opening, and as the suspicion began to dawn on shorts that they may have missed their chance to cover yesterday, buying at times became more urgent than discreet and some broad jumps were made. Coca-Cola recovered about 10 points. Steel, which sold down to 109½ yesterday morning, soon passed 115. A long list of stocks regained 2 to 3 points of their recent losses at their best levels. Some of the favorite preferred issues climbed more than that.

In the list of stocks to rise 1 to 4 points were Steel, Bethlehem, National Steel, Union Pacific, National Supply, Revere Copper, Chrysler, American Chain, Deere Wright, Westinghouse, Smelters, Collins & Aikman, Borg Warner, Eastman, Loews, Cutler Hammer, Norfolk & Western, Phelps Dodge, Gulf States, Illinois Central, Owens Glass, Libby Owens, Link Belt, Magma, du Pont, General Motors, Goodyear, U. S. Smelting, U. S. Rubber, U. C. Pipe, Wheeling and Westinghouse.

In the last hour's trading stocks seemed to tire a little possibly because of the lack of applause, and as demand slackened the brightest prices of earlier in the day were shaded. No new selling activity developed and the tone remained firm to the close. It was natural that the rapidity of the recovery should bring profit taking among those who were fortunate enough to sense the turn. Steel sold a point or so under its best price of the day.

Among the most active stocks were the railroads. Notice of them was taken partly because of predictions made by presidents of a number of roads and the appearance of the first of the monthly earnings statements. Actual price advances were less prominent than was the number of dealings. Union Pacific jumped 7 points on a light demand.

Textile shares made good the recent hints of a rise. Celanese and Industrial Rayon were the favorites. Farm implements were buoyant, rising 3 to 6 points. In the oil group, where trading was active and confident. Continental moved into new high ground. Utilities hardened, but Consolidated Edison and Telephone looked none too cheerful. Some of the tobaccos were weak. Amusements, fertilizers and beverages did well. On the whole the stock market was the best in several weeks.

With the Wagner act decisions by the Supreme Court out of the way, the market is left between two strong conflicting forces—regulation and inflation for business. As an immediate concern the inflationary influence seems to be the stronger, especially since the Administration, for the third or fourth time in the past week or so has given assurance that it is planning no immediate deflationary steps, such as a lifting of the gold price, a return to the tighter money policy advocated by the Federal Reserve Board (and which lasted from August to April), or a balancing of the budget either by real reduction in expenditures or by increased taxation, or both.

Controlling Prices.

That leaves the prospect for an inflationary rise in prices and in markets marred only by the increased likelihood of interference with business conduct. The Wagner decisions opened the way for application of that act toward corporation wage and labor control and for re-application of principles similar to those of the misguided NRA. How far the Administration may go in reviving the principles which while they were applied proved to be such a handicap to business recovery can only be guessed, but as commodity prices and living costs rise the temptation to take a hand with price fixing, with control of output and with wage fixing as well will grow stronger.

Sharply higher living costs are the bills that must be presented to settle the debt of devalued currency, deficit making and wage lifting. It is only natural that a Government should think it can avoid payment by controlling the symptoms of the disease. Rising prices tend to increase the demand for stocks, but the market will consider the possibility of reduced profit margins as operating costs mount under both governmental interference and consumer resistance.

Banking Position.

Changes in the condition of weekly reporting member banks were distorted by shifts in deposits and Government securities in banks in the Chicago district, and were clearly foreshadowed in the figures of Chicago banks published last Thursday. Just before April 1, assessment day for the Illinois personal property tax, Chicago district deposits fell $323,000,000 as nonresidents temporarily shifted funds in other States and banks' holdings of Government securities went down $201,000,000 as Illinois residents temporarily became holders of tax exempt Federal issues. Last week Chicago district banks regained $214,000,000 deposits and bought back $145,000,000 Government securities. Most of the deposit recovery was at the expense of the New York district, where demand deposits adjusted went down $161,000,000. There was a net increase of $41,000,000 in demand deposits adjusted for all the reporting banks together with an increase of $97,000,000 in deposits of banks. Foreign bank deposits were down $15,000,000.

Rise in Loans.

The purchases of Government securities in Chicago were large enough to produce a net gain of $83,000,000 in all loans and investments, but, except for an increase of 45,000,000 on miscellaneous and commercial loans, well distributed around the country, bank loans and holdings of securities decreased. Loans to brokers here and elsewhere fell $27,000,000; acceptances and commercial paper went down $5,000,000 and there were small decreases in loans on securities to others than brokers, loans on real estate and loans to banks. Government guaranteed securities owned by the banks decreased $10,000,000 and portfolio of other securities shrank $38,000,000, most of the other securities liquidation occurring in the New York district.

First In.

The Alton Railroad, a day or two late, came in first with the monthly earnings reports. In March the Alton turned into a profit what last year was a deficit, thanks to a good increase in gross revenues. Alton's record probably is similar to that of the road's as a whole, which turned to account the increasing traffic.

Going Up.

Bread prices have been raised a cent a loaf here—a jump of over 11 per cent, which is not to be put away as neglible—and similar advances are being announced for other parts of the country. A large wheat crop this year is in prospect, on the basis of winter growth and spring planting, and some are talking of a resumption of exports. That may be, but the Government seems committed to maintenance of a high price for wheat as a political debt to farmers, and the outlook for cheaper bread is not especially favorable. A higher currency value might do the trick, but inflation or no, the Administration is not going to take any chances along that line. Meanwhile consumers are going to pay the bill to cover the experiments in "soil conservation" in the buffalo grass districts.

Gasoline Production.

The production of natural gasoline during February averaged 5,347,000 gallons daily, the Bureau of Mines said yesterday. The average compared with 5,056,000 gallons a day during January and 4,629,000 gallons in February, 1936.

U.S. Is Building 6% of World's New Shipping

Great Britain and Ireland Are Constructing 41% of Total.

New York, April 13.—Further increases in the volume of tonnage of merchant vessels being constructed throughout the world are shown in a statement issued today by Lloyd's Register of Shipping covering returns from maritime countries for the quarter ended March 31. A gain of 200,000 gross tons over the total for the previous quarter is reported, bringing the volume of merchant ships being built to nearly two and a half million tons.

Approximately 41 per cent of the total current production is being built in Great Britain and Ireland, 6 per cent in the United States, and the remaining 53 per cent in the other maritime countries.

Gains in Quarter.

All the leading maritime countries, with the exception of Germany and Sweden, showed gains in ship building during the last quarter. The increase of 50,000 gross tons for Great Britain and Ireland brought those countries above the million ton mark; while for the United States a gain of 48,000 tons was shown. The other maritime countries, taken as a group, showed an increase of 107,000 tons. Lloyd's Register shows the contrast in construction during the last two quarters in the following table of gross tonnage:

	Mar. 31, '37	Dec. 31, '36
Great Britain and Ireland	1,014,454	963,642
United States	153,350	110,358

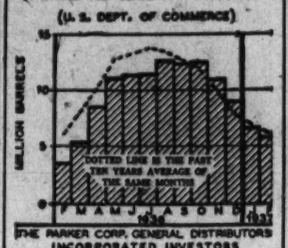
1936 Cement Output Double 1933 Total



Boston, Mass., April 13.—Although February production of Portland Cement dropped off from January the decline was but seasonal. In fact, February production was the greatest for any February since 1931 and exceeded a year ago by 66 per cent. The cement produced during 1936 surpassed 1935 by nearly 50 per cent and was double the production in 1933.

Steam Locomotive To Compete With Diesel

Chicago, April 13 (AP).—The Burlington Railroad announced today it had completed construction of a $140,000 streamlined steam locomotive which will be put through tests soon to fight it out with the Diesel-Electric Locomotives for speed, stamina and efficiency.

Officials said the locomotive, built in the Burlington, Iowa, shops, was believed to have a speed of 100 to 125 miles an hour. They said the Diesel-Electric Locomotives have reached 122 miles an hour.

Railroads Cut Proportion of Upkeep Costs

Ratio Has Been Reduced From 32.7% in 1929 to 30.4% Last Year.

New York, April 13.—Given the expected increase in operating revenues this year, railroads should be able to reduce the ratio of maintenance expenditures to gross, thereby permitting a substantial part of the increased revenue to flow through to net operating income. A survey made public today by the Standard Statistics Co. indicates that this ratio may well drop below 30 per cent, which would compare with the following ratios of recent years:

	Per cent
1936	30.4
1935	31.2
1934	30.7
1933	30.0
1932	31.0
1931	32.2
1929	32.7

Fewer than half of the roads that co-operated to the extent of indicating their 1937 maintenance plans intend to maintain approximately the same ratio as in 1936. A few indicated higher ratios than last year. Almost half indicated that the dollar amount of maintenance expenditures would be the same or lower than for 1936 (which, with increased gross, would mean a lower ratio), or that while the dollar amount might be increased, the ratio would be reduced.

In only a few cases was deferred maintenance admitted. Although the amounts spent for maintenance have been greatly reduced during the depression, improved methods and materials render comparisons of dollar expenditures almost valueless.

Fight for Reo Motor Averted by Pact

Detroit, April 13 (AP).—A threatened fight for control of the Reo Motor Car Co was averted today by an agreement reached between the management and Frank A. Vanderlip, jr., of New York, representing what was termed an "independent stockholders' committee."

Under the agreement the Vanderlip group agrees to vote its proxies with the management and the board of directors will be increased from five to nine. Two of the new directors will be Vanderlip and Herbert Wilson Smith, of the National Carbon & Carbide Co. Two others will be named at the annual meeting scheduled for April 20.

Wagner Case Victor Smokes 2 Dozen Pipes

Wyzanski, Crack New Deal Lawyer, Also Treasures Holmes Letter.

In one of the aluminum corridors of the Department of Justice is office No. 5615, and in it, beneath a framed letter on the bare wall sits a dark-haired, clean-cut young man, puffing a pipe and working.

This is Charles Edward Wyzanski, jr., unmarried, 30 years old. The pipe is one of 24 pipes—12 at home and 12 at the office; the letter is his greatest treasure, a note from the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, and his work is winning cases in the Supreme Court for the United States Government.

On February 10 Wyzanski stood before the Supreme Court to argue the constitutionality of the Wagner labor relations act, and performed one of the most remarkable feats of memory seen in that courtroom.

Argues Without Notes.

For 50 minutes he spoke entirely without briefs or notes—and without stumbling or faltering. The bar before him, always covered thickly with the lawyers' papers, was bare as his hand, while he recited from memory the complicated citations of the former cases, page and number; the facts at issue, many of them technical, and including masses of detailed numerical tabulations.

The justices sat absolutely silent, and asked no questions as Wyzanski talked, always directly and to the point in question. He has but one gesture, a raised right hand which he keeps moving slowly in a shaping gesture, as if to keep the facts and the law before him and the court continuously.

Monday the court decided for Wyzanski and Solicitor General Stanley Reed over John W. Davis and Earl F. Reed, the great constitutional corporation lawyers, who defended some of the Wagner cases.

The President sent Wysanski from the Labor Department last year to the Justice Department to aid in arguing cases. He has won five out of the six he has argued, and the sixth, the Social Security case, is still undecided.

One of the cases he argued was the Osakashosenkaisha Line vs. the United States. He actually can say the name of this Japanese shipping firm, and noted smilingly that Chief Justice Hughes said it accurately also, in announcing the decision.

Wyzanski really entered the New Deal because he refused to draw up a brief for the famous law firm for which he worked in Boston—Ropes, Gray, Boyden & Perkins. Loring Young, a partner, asked him to write a brief against the constitutionality of a bill then in the Massachusetts Legislature, drawn along the pattern of the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act.

Firm in Belief.

He refused on the ground he believed in the law.

Young, a good sportsman, told Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins about this at a dinner one evening. She decided she wanted to use this young man. So the President appointed him a solicitor for the Department of Labor in April, 1933, where he stayed until November, 1935, serving some of the time as Acting Secretary of Labor in the absence of his chief.

He represented the United States, with others, at the seventy-second and seventy-third sessions of the International Labor Organization in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1933, and then was moved by the President to the Justice Department.

Wyzanski helped draft the Wagner act. When it approached the Supreme Court, Charles Horsky, A. H. Feller and he found a vacant office and talked about the case for three weeks. They just sat and talked and smoked.

Argued From All Angles.

"We argued it out there from every angle," said Wyzanski. "After that any of us could have argued it before the court without a quaver. Then we wrote our skeleton brief and clothed it with the citations of cases and precedents, and with the facts in question."

He plays squash racquets and tennis and is a "non-golfer." He plays poker with Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman James M. Landis, who once was his law teacher at Harvard Law School. Landis gave Wyzanski one of the lowest marks he ever had given anyone in contracts, and the highest mark he had ever awarded any student in constitutional law.

He wrote Justice Holmes 10 years ago, when he was 20, and the great lawyer, answering briefly, wrote back:

"However a man feels about his work, nature is likely to see to it that his business becomes his master and an end in itself, so that he may find that he has been a martyr under the illusion of self-seeking.

"But we rank men partly at least by the nature of their dominant interests. And we think more highly of those who are conscious of ulterior ends—be those ends intellectual ideals (to see the universe in the particular) or the sympathetic wish to help their kind.

"For your sake I hope that when your work seems to present only mean details you may realize that every detail has the mystery of the universe behind it and may keep in your heart with undying faith."

Nothing means more to Wyzanski than that letter.

Attorney General Congratulates Aides on Victory

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings photographed with his assistants who argued the various cases involving the validity of the Wagner labor relations act. Wagner Ruling Speeds Action In Hotel Cases

Local labor will benefit directly from Monday's Supreme Court decision, it was revealed yesterday, as Morris Verbow announced he now has four cases pending before the National Labor Relations Board. Verbow is business manager of the Hotel Employes' Alliance.

The unquestioned constitutionality of the Wagner act, he said, now makes it possible for him to press for action. The cases, which should be decided within the next three weeks, grew out of the recent Willard Hotel strike, and out of last year's Troika Restaurant lockout.

The first two cases involve Garland P. Webb and Mabel Normand, both former Willard employes. Webb was discharged allegedly for union activity, and Miss Normand allegedly for testifying before the National Labor Relations Board in his behalf.

In the third hotel case, authority of the Hotel Employes' Alliance to act as sole bargaining agent for the hotel workers was questioned. The NLRB will, it was stated, set the date for an election among the workers to decide that issue.

In the Troika case, which the NLRB termed a lockout, according to Verbov, a partial settlement was reached late last year.

The Board must yet determine, he said, the amount to be given by the restaurant to the men for the nine weeks during which they allegedly were locked out. The amount, said Verbov, will include salary and tips.

Of the 2,072 cases already heard by the Board, eight have affected local labor.

In addition to the three Willard Hotel and the Troika Restaurant cases, the Board has heard and decided the Washington, Virginia and Maryland Coach Co. case, ruled on Monday by the Supreme Court; a case involving discharge of a Y. M. C. A. engineer, Leroy W. Jenkins; the Nolan Motor Co. case, wherein there was alleged discriminatory discharge of an employe, and the Postal Telegraph case, involving the alleged refusal of the company to bargain with 200 employes.

The Postal Telegraph case was closed on March 8 after the company agreed to bargain

Social Laws Pushed in Congress After Decisions on Wagner Act

legislation was urged by Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), of South Carolina, who said much recent legislation invalidated by the court "was so carelessly drawn that no court could hold it constitutional." He said difficulties with the court would be ended if Congress, instead of the New Deal's "bright young men," drew its own legislation.

Two other Democratic Senators—James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, and Pat McCarran, of Nevada—said Congress needs an awakened appreciation of its own responsibility in the spheres of activity opened.

Byrnes said if there is any further labor legisaltion is should not only outlaw sit-down strikes, but ought to impose responsibilities on employes as well as employers in fulfillment of contracts.

Sees "Checks" Needed.

"Congress is faced with a new and tremendous responsibility," said McCarran." The Supreme Court in effect has said: 'You wanted full policy-determining power, now it is all yours.' To prevent Congress from running wild under the commerce clause interpretation, it must be careful to write checks into any legislation it passes."

Bailey observed that "nothing appears in the opinions to indicate that collective bargaining may be carried to the point of discrimination against workers not in the bargaining group—or that a worker may be represented by a majority of his fellow workers against his will."

Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York, co-author of the Wagner labor act, continued of the opinion that no further legislation dealing with labor relations is now needed. But Chairman William P. Connery, of the House Labor Committee, joint author with Wagner, said he not only anticipated new wage and hour legislation from the White House, but his committee was now waiting for it.

Report Laws Drafted.

In one quarter it was reported wage and hour legislation already had been drafted in anticipation of Wagner act invalidation, and now must be revised in the light of the court's validation.

While suggesting new wage and hour legislation may be considered, the Senate majority leader criticized Supreme Court shifts in opinion, and suggested a one-judge reversal of yesterday's opinion might leave Congress again unable to act.

Citing the Supreme Court's Guffey coal decision, holding labor relations between mining employers and employes are not subject to Federal regulation, Senator Robinson in a statement to the press asked:

"What is the true and permanent doctrine on the subject?

"Day before yesterday one rule seemed to apply, but as a result of the cases decided yesterday, a notably different rule seems to apply."

The majority leader also pointed to Supreme Court over-ruling of former State minimum wage decisions in the recent validation of the Washington State law.

organizations and herself and eight others representing the Government and the public. She said numerous large employers had communicated with her, some expressing surprise at the Supreme Court rulings but all advising her that since the Wagner act had been upheld they desired to learn the best methods of conducting the required bargaining with employes.

Cites "Law of Land."

In her telegram of invitation the Secretary said collective bargaining "is established as the law of the land," and added:

"Recognizing that there have been wide differences of approach and experience in working out the mutual relationship involved and believing that the rules, principles and functions of both parties in this relationship can best be defined by the parties involved, I am calling a series of conferences on the stabilization of industrial relations under collective bargaining. The purpose is to determine the wisest procedures and safeguards that can be mutually agreed on as an orderly and constructive method for attaining this universally desired result."

Miss Perkins said many employers and workers' representatives, inexperienced in such matters, face breakdowns of their negotiations when they undertake collective bargaining, and bitterness and disappointment will result unless agreements can be had in advance on simple principles and rules of the game." She cautioned that when deadlocks appear a conciliator should be brought in to reduce the points at issue and help reach an accord.

Sees "Code" Unlikely.

She said development of a "code" of procedure was not likely, though neither was it prohibited at the conference. Legislation might be asked, she said, if the conferences develop problems that seem to require it. Concern was expressed by the Secretary lest undue impatience arise among the workers.

"No Utopia is possible in a few weeks," she said. "People must be adjusted to a new pattern of living."

She warned also that there "will be many ticklish points" to be settled by the Labor Relations Board, but hoped there would be no rush of cases to swamp the board.

Both Green and Lewis, rival leaders in the country's union labor, are among those to attend the conference.

Green, Roosevelt Talk.

Green visited President Roosevelt yesterday and later told reporters they had had a general discussion of child labor, minimum wage legislation and the Wagner act decisions. He told the President, he said, that sit-down strikes are subsiding "because everyone is beginning to feel that activity is unpopular." Green has denounced sit-downs, while Lewis has been the director of those in the automobile industry.

Green declared to newspapermen his belief that the President's court reorganization proposal should be pressed despite the court's validation of the Wagner act. He said the decision in the Jones and Laughlin steel case is "long and involved and a bit confusing as to the constitutionality of the act as it would apply to other industries."

Green's executive council meeting may result in a call for a special convention of the Federation to expel the Lewis unions, now under suspension. The convention at Tampa last fall authorized the council to follow such a course.

House Sit-Down Fight.

Chairman William Connery (Democrat), Massachusetts, of the House Labor Committee, conferred with James Roosevelt, executive assistant to the President, and later indicated he had received some encouragement in his move to delay new hour and wage legislation until after the court reorganization proposal is disposed of.

Senate Majority Leader Robinson, of Arkansas, said, however, that such legislation "undoubtedly" will be considered at this session.

House action on the resolution against sit-down strikes and company unions is likely next Tuesday. The House Labor Committee fought over the measure for two hours yesterday before approving it. Representatives Keller (Democrat), Illinois; Gildea and Dunn (Democrats), Pennsylvania, and Schneider (Progressive), Wisconsin, opposed it.

Minority Report Planned.

They contended Monday's court decisions had done much to solve labor disputes, and said they would file a minority report.

On the House floor Representative Hoffman (Republican), Michigan, charged President Roosevelt had paid a political debt to Lewis "by remaining silent while laws were violated, while violence and anarchy reigned in the State of Michigan and elsewhere."

He predicted Henry Ford would abide by provisions of the Wagner act, but said many people "hope and pray" Ford's employes will form a union of their own, instead of dealing "through the medium of self-constituted leaders." He asked, in case Ford closes his factories rather than yield, "how may jobs will the C. I. O. provide for the workers so thrown out of employment?"

Secretary Perkins made it clear that persons invited to her conferences would attend as individuals, rather than as representing the concerns or associations with which they are connected.

Those invited are:

Government-Public.

John J. Winant, former chairman of the Social Security Board; J. Warren Madden, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board; Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Corporation; Henry Bruere, president of the Bowery Savings Bank; Father Francis H. Haas, Raymond Ingersoll, president of the Brooklyn Borough; William Leiserson, chairman of the National Mediation Board, and H. A. Millis, former member of the National Labor Board.
